Farex Queen Pudding

3½ tablespoonfuls Farex · half pint milk · 1 dessertspoonful sugar Grated rind of half a small lemon · 1 egg, separated into yolk and white · 2 teaspoonfuls caster sugar · Jam

Mix Farex and milk together. Add lemon rind. Bring to boil, and boil for two minutes. Remove from heat and add sugar and egg yolk. Turn into greased pie dish, bake in moderately hot oven, 15 to 20 minutes until lightly set. Whip white of egg very stiffly, add sugar, and whip again until glossy. Pile on top of the pudding over thin coating of jam. Replace in oven until lightly browned.

HOSPITAL AND OTHER NURSING VACANCIES

Board of Management for the Moray Hospitals

Dr. GRAY'S, BILBOHALL AND MARYHILL HOSPITALS ELGIN

MATRON

Owing to the retirement of the present holder, applications are invited, from those possessing the qualifications of R.G.N. and R.M.N., for the post of Matron of the above units now being run as one hospital, with a total of 290 beds (S.C.M. desirable but not essential).

An attractive house is available within the grounds of Bilbohall Hospital.

The three units are situated close together within the confines of the county town, Dr. Gray's being an active surgical unit under the care of general practitioners and consultants from the area and from Aberdeen. It is a nurse training school for the General Part of the Register, and Bilbohall Hospital is a training school for the Registration in Mental Nursing.

The other senior administrative nursing posts are a Deputy Matron (male) at Bilbohall, an Assistant Matron at Dr. Gray's and a Departmental Sister at Maryhill Maternity Hospital.

Close contact is maintained with the town and district through an active League of Hospital Friends.

Considerable development is expected during the next few years, and the post should interest someone with a progressive outlook.

Applications, stating age, training, qualifications and experience, together with the names of three referees, should be sent by 4th November, 1961, to the Group Secretary, Moray Hospitals, Winchester House, 1 King Street, Elgin. (2433)

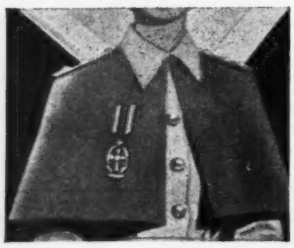
why staff nurse is a lieutenant now

It was the thought of travel that first attracted her. She was doing well in a hospital in one of our smaller cities and she was contented . . . but . . . surely there was more to living than this?

So she found out all about the QA's. About chances of getting a commission, about the kind of nursing she could expect to do, about travel and about pay.

To her surprise she found that Army nurses do just about every kind of nursing, including midwifery and pediatrics. She found that pay and leave were better than she was getting. And she found she would be certain to go abroad. So she joined. If you are British and have the S.R.N. certificate, you should find out more about the QA's. Write today to The Matron-in-Chief, The War Office, Dept. AMD4 (TN/Q1c), London, S.W.1, for further information.



Sub cruce candida— "Under the white cross". This emblem was bestowed on the QA's by Queen Alexandra in 1902 when she became the first President. It symbolises the qualities of courage and dedication that QA's have shown all over the world from the Crimean War right up to the present.

Patients are People

AT AN RCN CONFERENCE NEXT WEEK 500 nurses, doctors and administrators will be gathered together to discuss The Hospital Patient—Person or Case? We all know that patients are people. Among the chief reasons why they are sometimes treated as cases are lack of time, shortage of staff, and insufficient accommodation.

The conference will cover such matters as the patients' needs, replanning the hospital service, and factors affecting the attitudes of patients and staff. The Nursing Times this week presents several articles that may be relevant to the group discussions which will be one of the features of the conference.

'From the Outside' is the first of a series of extracts from People in Hospital, by Elizabeth Barnes, a former member of the Nursing Times staff. Miss Barnes wrote her book, to be published next week*, after serving as co-ordinator for a World Federation of Mental Health project in which groups in Europe and North America studied psychological problems in general hospitals, and this first instalment covers what patients think of hospitals. The author says that, as she travelled round the world on this project, she found many people wrongly concluding that she was investigating problems in psychiatric hospitals, ignoring the fact that psychological problems occur in general hospitals, as of course they do in any institution. Miss Barnes will be a panel speaker at the conference.

Can patients be treated as people when they are nursed under the 'progressive patient care' régime? Mr. Brennan, another speaker at the conference, will doubtless be asked a number of questions on this subject and on the organization of the Mid-Ulster Hospital, Magherafelt, where he is surgeon. The régime at this hospital is described on page 1386. This is the first hospital in the United Kingdom where progressive patient care is practised extensively. It may be that it is a blueprint for the future, and it therefore demands our study.

'Where Nurses Live' is about nurses as people; how they live and where they live. It is a review of a factual survey of nurses' accommodation†, the first of what is hoped will be a long series of RCN research projects.

The Nursing Times is edited by nurses for nurses, and we hope that our knowledge and belief that patients must always be treated as people and never as cases is reflected in all the material we present each week to our readers. For when we cease to believe that patients are human beings who are sick, we have failed fundamentally in our task.

News and Comment

Miss Elizabeth Barnes, whose book, 'People in Hospital', is to be published next week. The first of a series of extracts appears on page 1395.

Progessive Nursing Care Investigation

A GROUP has been set up by the Ministry of Health to study progressive patient care. Dr. Gordon, senior administrative medical officer, Birmingham RHB, has been invited to join this group. Other members are: Dr. Revans, SAMO, Wessex RHB; Miss Pugh Jones, matron, Coventry and Warwickshire Hospital; Miss Biddulph, hospital nursing officer, MOH; Mr. Pronger, MOH; Miss Puddicombe, matron, Addenbrooke's Hospital; Miss James, regional nursing officer, Oxford RHB; Dr. Davies, MOH; and a clinician. Two experimental intensive care units are already planned in the Birmingham region so that information is available on the subject before the new hospital at Coventry is completed. Readers will remember that Miss D. Hall, nursing officer, Birmingham RHB, who last year studied progressive patient care in America on a WHO fellowship, said at a meeting in Winchester (see Nursing Times April 28, page 514) that this concept had been accepted by the Birmingham RHB some time ago when the new hospital was being planned. On page 1386 we publish an account of the experiment in progressive patient care being carried out at Mid-Ulster Hospital, Magherafelt.

University Honours a Nurse

THE SENATUS ACADEMICUS of the University of Edinburgh has admitted to the degree of Master of Arts Miss Elsie Stephenson, S.R.N., S.C.M., R.F.N., H.V. CERT., director of the Nursing Studies Unit in the university since 1956. All our readers will wish to join us in congratulating Miss Stephenson on this honour.

'Grinding to a Halt'

THIS OMINOUS HEADING was the title of a feature article in The Times this week on the shortage of radiographers and physiotherapists in the National Health Service. There are great shortages in both professions and the writer of the article attributes this to the very poor pay that practitioners receive. It is interesting that wastage during the training period is almost negligible although the students are responsible for their own fees. The shortage of physiotherapists (who have no lack of recruits) is also due to a shortage of teachers and the Chartered Society of Physiotherapy and the Ministry of Health have planned emergency short-time courses for teachers to start on October 17. On qualification radiographers receive £525 per annum and physiotherapists the same. This is also the starting salary of the general trained staff nurse.

Inflated Waiting Lists

INDIFFERENT ADMINISTRATION and organization often cloud the true position of hospital waiting lists for elderly and chronically ill patients. This is stated in the annual report for 1960 of the Hospital Personal Aid Service for the Elderly, of the King Edward's Hospital Fund. In the case of one hospital group, of the 62 patients on the list, it was found that nine had already been admitted, 14 had recovered or refused admission, two had died, and seven had left the district or could not be traced. In addition to its work of reviewing waiting lists and assessing the needs and priorities of patients who apply for admission to hospital, the Service has during the last year helped to set up a model scheme for co-ordinating and developing the services for the elderly sick in the Borough of Lewisham. Services for the young chronic sick, too, have been under scrutiny, and an inquiry to determine the best type of accommodation has been set in motion.

Economist's View of the NHS

THE PRESENT FINANCIAL STRUCTURE of the NHS should be replaced by one based largely on patients' fees and private insurance. This is the view of Dr. D. S. Lees, of the University College of North Staffordshire. It is expressed in a paper* just published by the Institute of Economic Affairs, a non-party organization founded in 1956 as an educational trust. Dr. Lees argues that 'a monolithic structure financed by taxation is ill-suited to a service in which the personal element is so strong.' He feels that the Government's role should be confined to ensuring minimum standards, giving assistance to those who cannot afford to insure themselves against illness, and subsidizing special services, such as those for mental illness. He claims that had this system been in operation since 1948, more would probably have been spent on health, and particularly on hospital building, than successive Governments have been able to afford.

Inter-hospital Swimming Gala

ST. THOMAS'S HOSPITAL for the second year in succession won the Nursing Mirror Pre-eminence Shield, at the Inter-hospital Nurses' Swimming Association Gala held in London on October 19. Westminster Hospital was a close second. Miss B. Trim, for Guy's Hospital, won the Challenge Shield in the final of the 100 yards free-style (Guy's were also the winners last year). The overall standard of swimming was high and all races were narrowly won, making an exciting evening. Mr. A. C. Price, president of the Amateur Swimming Association, presented the awards.

Birmingham Centre of Nursing Education

The College needs an established centre of education outside London and, as such a centre is already in existence in Birmingham, this centre should be kept open. The Birmingham centre should, in future, be a direct extension of the Education Division of the College. These findings of the group set up at the September Council meeting were presented to the October Council and agreed. So Birmingham remains open as a provincial centre of nurse education.

Obstetric Secondment

Resulting from an invitation from the BMA, the College is appointing representatives to meet the Association to discuss the inclusion of obstetrics in the syllabus for general training.

'Nursing Times' Advisory Board

As a result of the findings of a small group set up by the Nursing Times Advisory Board in July, all proceedings of the Council, Branches Standing Committee and Central Sectional Committees will in future be the responsibility of the Royal College of Nursing and, when reported in the Nursing Times, will be regarded as official proceedings. In the near future there will appear monthly, in the Nursing Times, a four-page supplement devoted entirely to the Royal College of Nursing; this will be a supplement over and above the usual 30 pages of editorial matter. There will be a statement in each issue that all the views expressed, except those which are official College statements, will be those of the individual putting them forward. The reason for this is that both the Royal College of Nursing and the Nursing Times wish to promote free and full discussion.

Section Organization

In the light of the increasing number of meetings that are being held by the Sections and Branches, it is felt that the time has come for the views of members to be sought about Section organization. The matter is being referred to the Sections and then to the Branches for their consideration.

Committee on Nurse Education

The names of the 34 members of the Committee on Nurse Education are published on page 1417. It is hoped that the Committee, under the chairmanship of Sir Harry Platt, will meet in the near future.

'Proficiency Allowances' for Trainee Nurses

The Sister Tutor Section wrote to Council, expressing their concern about the claims for 'proficiency allowances' for nurses in training. While appreciating many of the points made by the Section, Council felt that these views should have been put forward earlier; there were representatives of the Sections (including the Sister Tutor Section) in the group that drew up the College's proposals. The proposals were approved by the Labour Relations Committee and by the Council itself in May.

THE MID-ULSTER HOSPITAL, MAGHERAFELT

Progressive Patient Care

IN AN IRISH HOSPITAL

TRADITIONALLY, British hospital patients have been nursed in wards assigned to particular consultants. They have been medical or surgical patients, urological or cardiological patients, patients of Dr. Smith or Mr. Brown. Generally a patient admitted to a hospital bed stays in that bed until he is discharged, unless his condition, or the doctors' view of his condition, changes—a 'medical' patient may be found to require surgical treatment, or a patient admitted as suspected appendicitis may later be diagnosed as suffering from a medical condition.

An American Idea

In America, various factors, particularly the high hospital costs in an unsocialized medical economy, and nursing staff shortage, have given rise to another system, known as progressive patient care. Wards are designated not as 'medical' or 'surgical', but 'intensive care', 'intermediate care' and 'minimal care'; patients are given beds according to the intensity and technical complexity of the nursing care required, and moved from ward to ward as their requirements change.

Many British nurses and doctors, having seen this system in operation in the United States, have come back wondering whether it would have any value under British conditions. The germ of the idea is in fact found in the practice of most ward sisters of grouping their most ill patients together, usually where they can best be observed and quickly reached by the nursing staff.

Last year the Nursing Times published an account of an experiment in modified progressive patient care (although the term was not used) at Barnet General Hospital. This, however, applied only to surgical patients.

At the Mid-Ulster Hospital at Magherafelt, an experiment started only three months ago represents what we believe to be the first attempt in the United Kingdom to work out the implications of progressive patient care for all kinds of patients: medical, surgical, and certain types of gynaecological and obstetric cases.

At present the chronic sick, paediatric and routine obstetric beds at the hospital are outside the scheme. It does, however, apply to maternity patients delivered in theatre by Caesarean section.

The Mid-Ulster was rather unkindly described to us by the consultant surgeon, Mr. W. Brennan, as 'an old workhouse extensively renovated'. Actually, it is a very pleasant place, much more domestic in scale than most English workhouse buildings, and an extremely good job has been made of the renovation, both inside and out.

However, Mr. Brennan's point was that architecturally the hospital is not ideal for progressive patient care, which requires wide corridors to wheel beds from one ward to another, and a suitable arrangement of multiple-bed and single-bed rooms.

In fact, one ward has been set aside and adapted as an intensive care unit of eight beds, the remaining wards being divided into male and female intermediate care, and male and female convalescent or minimal care. No distinction of sex is made in the intensive care unit.

The experiment at Magherafelt is only possible because of the excellent personal relations and high degree of professional co-operation that exists between the three consultants concerned, Mr. W. Brennan, surgeon, Dr. J. McConnell, physician, and Mr. A. A. Watson, obstetrician and gynaecologist. Perhaps it is easier because there is only one consultant of each kind at this small hospital. Again, the experiment would not have been possible if the matron, Miss S. A. Cameron, had been afraid to try out a new idea or unable to secure the wholehearted co-operation of her staff.

These conditions may not exist everywhere, and where they do not exist the team approach to the patient, which is such a notable feature of the Magherafelt experiment, may not be possible. There are no consultants' names on patients' beds. Each patient receives the attention of the appropriate consultant as and when he needs it, and both Mr. Brennan and Dr. McConnell do rounds on the same patients. After operation the anaesthetist and the surgeon jointly decide whether the patient should go to the intensive care unit, or whether he can be transferred from theatre direct to intermediate care. Intensive care may be indicated on surgical or anaesthetic grounds; that is why the decision is a joint one.

Intensive Care Unit

In the intensive care unit there is, surprisingly, an atmosphere of peace and quiet. Perhaps this is because the nurses there have virtually no routine responsibilities; their only concern is the emergency of the moment, which they can therefore cope with quietly and without distraction. All the patients are clearly within view, although there are cubicle curtains between them, and all necessary equipment is readily available. Here it is that the most highly technical nursing is carried out.

Some of the patients require intensive care because they have undergone major surgery. All patients with intravenous infusions are nursed in the intensive care unit, and patients requiring oxygen treatment, patients with conditions such as coronary thrombosis and tetanus in the acute phase.

Intermediate Care

As soon as they are well enough they are transferred to intermediate care, but if they should again become severely ill they are sent straight back, because in the intensive care unit all the technical resources of the medical and nursing team can most quickly and effectively be brought to bear.

The point is sometimes made in discussions of progressive patient care that doctors prefer to have all their patients together when they do their rounds. On the other hand, Dr. McConnell commented that one of the things he liked about the system was that when he came to the hospital, he always knew where to go to find his really ill patients first.

No Saving in Staff

The emphasis throughout our discussion with the staff at Magherafelt was on better service and care for the patients. Miss Cameron said quite firmly that the system did not result in a net saving of staff. Fewer nurses were required to staff the convalescent or 'self-help' wards, but more were needed in the intensive care unit. The ratios at Magherafelt are: intensive care, 1.5 nurses to 1 patient; intermediate care, 1.0 nurse to 2.5 patients; convalescent, 1 nurse to 10 patients. In each case these figures refer to the whole 24 hours.

Many patients never see the 'self-help' wards. They may be admitted acutely ill to the intensive care unit and later discharged from an intermediate care ward. The keynote of the self-help ward is rehabilitation, although this starts in the intermediate care unit. The patient dresses in his outdoor clothes, makes his own bed and helps to keep his room clean and tidy. There he is taught to care for any appliance he may have, to manage his colostomy, or to practise walking.

Most of the 'self-help' patients have single rooms. This, it is maintained, is the right use for them, although possibly two-bed wards would be ideal—even with a day room and a dining-room the patient in the single room can be lonely. Mr. Brennan roundly condemns single rooms for very ill patients; 'death traps' he calls them.

The proportion of the different kinds of beds is something that is being watched. At first it was thought that eight intensive care beds would be too few in a 167-bed hospital; now it is thought to be ample.

Matron told us that patients often say to her how secure they felt when they were very ill in the intensive care unit, knowing that the nurses were near all the time. The ward is very quiet; everyone who goes in respects the illness of the patients and walks and talks as in a church. Visitors are only allowed in a few minutes at a time, masked and gowned.

Sometimes a patient who leaves the intensive care unit feels neglected in the intermediate ward. Matron says it takes these patients about two days to come down to earth again! Severely ill private patients are nursed in the intensive care unit with the others until they are well enough to go back to their private rooms.

So far the staff have been enthusiastic. The doctors have no difficulty in knowing where their patients are because their position is recorded on a board with coloured pegs at a central point in the hospital. Ideally, under this system, permanent nursing staff can be assigned to the wards for which they are by temperament or training suited. The enrolled nurse obviously has a big part to play in the intermediate care wards, and the nurse with district or health visiting experience would be in her element in the 'self-help' wards. Student nurses can obtain their experience by spending time in each type of unit.

Will the Idea Spread?

It is too early yet to assess the experiment at Magherafelt. Will the pattern spread? Already Magherafelt looks like becoming a centre of pilgrimage as applications to visit are received fron nurses in Britain and Europe. We know that a new hospital is being planned at Coventry on the basis of progressive patient care.

There are dangers in taking up an idea because it is fashionable, because it has apparently been successful in another country. There are dangers in adopting a system merely in order to save staff. But this was not the emphasis we found at the Mid-Ulster; the stress was on better care for the patient. The experiment deserves to be watched closely. If progressive patient care is widely adopted it will undoubtedly affect the design of our hospitals and the composition (though perhaps not the total numbers) of our nursing team. But it must be adopted for the right reasons. B.V.W.

TODAY'S DRUGS

Equanil (Wyeth)
Mepavlon (Imperial Chemical (Pharmaceuticals))
Miltown (Wallace)

These products are all meprobamate, a mild tranquillizer. It is doubtful if it is better than phenobarbitone for psychiatric disturbances; it is of less value for the more seriously disturbed patients, including psychotics.

In neurological diseases entailing spasticity of muscles, meprobamate sometimes decreases the muscle spasm, and even patients with Parkinsonism may be benefited.

Meprobamate has no specific advantages over other mild sedative drugs.

A wide variety of toxic effects have been reported, but most of them are rare. Skin rashes are the commonest, general hypersensitivity reactions next. Habituation and even addiction can occur, but very rarely. Abrupt withdrawal after heavy and prolonged administration will produce tremulousness, gastrointestinal disturbances and sometimes convulsions. Suicide can be committed with meprobamate.

MEDICINE

Colonic Impaction

and Rectal Incontinence

T. N. RUDD, M.D., M.R.C.P., Consultant Physician, Geriatric Unit, Southampton Group of Hospitals

Paradoxically, constipation may present as 'diarrhoea'. Dr. Rudd explains in his article the causes of this very troublesome condition of the elderly.

FAECAL IMPACTION is a well-recognized condition in middle-aged persons, in whom it presents a dramatic picture. William Heberden, who is remembered by Heberden's nodes, wrote of it in 1816:

> The faeces sometimes lie in the rectum for many months, and are collected into a large hard mass, which cannot be voided without the help of a surgeon. The signs of this are, pains in the belly; a constant desire to go to stool, even just after an evacuation; none but liquid faeces are ever voided; and the disorder is attended with a difficulty of making water[1].

John Ryle, who gave his name to the gastric tube, described a number of cases where the rectal blockage was due to a 'ball-valve accumulation' of faeces[2]. Rectal examination in such patients reveals a hard, smooth or craggy motion low in the rectum, which as it cannot be voided naturally, needs manual removal, sometimes under general anaesthesia. In old people, however, the same condition, though much commoner, presents itself in a less striking manner, owing no doubt to the more gradual development of the impaction combined with a loss of rectal sensation, and the diminished mental awareness so common in old age. It is consequently less often suspected by patient, nurse or doctor.

If undealt with, faecal impaction can have only one of two terminations: it can lead to acute intestinal obstruction and perhaps death, with or without a laparotomy; or, on the other hand, the impaction may break down through bacterial action, with the production of an enormous soft or liquid stool which is discharged in an incontinent fashion. The latter is what usually happens in old people, in whom faecal incontinence is generally the end-result of an undetected faecal impaction. This important but often unrecognized fact is fundamental to the prevention and management of faecal incontinence.

Frequency of Faecal Incontinence

Under old chronic sick ward conditions, where 90 per cent. of patients were bedfast and incontinent of urine, nearly one half were incontinent of faeces as well. Although public assistance institutions are things of the past, faecal incontinence is still frequent among old people in acute wards, as well as in those geriatric wards where its causation and correct management are not understood. It may be found in more than 50 per cent. of senile patients seen in their homes by a geriatric consultant with a view to admission to hospital.

Clinical Importance of Incontinence

The burden imposed by an unpleasant condition of so frequent occurrence is considerable. It creates a load of heavy nursing of the most distasteful kind, in home and hospital. It increases sluicing and laundry problems to impossible proportions, necessitating expensive and elaborate apparatus for cleaning purposes. It multiplies the demand for stocks of clean linen, gives rise to unpleasant smells, and finally makes the nursing of the aged one of the most difficult and unpopular branches of the profession.

Its social effects are equally disastrous, and it is often the compelling reason which makes further home care impossible. The strain imposed on relatives is enormous, so that it is not surprising that the demand for admission to hospital is consequently increased. If the patient is at all aware mentally, the condition is a most distressing one for him to bear. It threatens his security in home or in lodgings, it emphasizes his increasing dependence, isolates him from more normal people and may speed the onset of senile dementia, with possible mental certification. The position of the faecally incontinent patient on admission to hospital is immediately prejudiced.

Were faecal incontinence a condition inherent in old age, the situation would be a tragic one: that it is not so, but that it is due to an undetected faecal impaction undergoing natural relief, is of the utmost importance to every nurse and doctor who works among old people.

Abstract of a lecture given at conferences on 'Modern Methods of Bowel Management' in London and Edinburgh, October and November 1960.

Fig. 1. X-ray of colon after barium meal (pre-evacuation film) showing filling capacity of large bowel.

Origin of Faecal Incontinence

The root-cause of faecal incontinence is, of course, undetected or untreated chronic constipation, often with superadded dyschezia (torpor). Constipating factors important in old age include: (1) lack of exercise; (2) inadequate fluid consumption; (3) defective diet, low in protein and vitamins; (4) defective bowel habit; (5) ingestion of constipating or unabsorbable substances, such as Normacol, barium salts used in diagnostic radiography and the familiar tab. codeine co.

Failure to evacuate the bowel residue leads to accumulation throughout the length of the colon, producing a column of hardened faeces several feet long and up to three inches in diameter. This is true colonic impaction. The lower end of this column is lubricated by secretion of mucus by the rectal glands, and this allows moulding to occur, so that a movable ball-valve is sometimes produced within the rectum. Peristaltic movement in the colon forces the mass down into the rectum, the lower end of which undergoes progressive distension until the anal ring becomes stretched and incompetent.

The anal condition then resembles that of the vulva during parturition, before crowning of the foetal head takes place. The lower end of the rectal impaction may sometimes appear 'crowned' by the anal sphincter. If an acute crisis from intestinal obstruction does not supervene, bacterial action will liquefy part of the retained faeces. The stretched anus offers no bar to the fluid being discharged and a spurious diarrhoea occurs. The motion is then seen as a thick highly-coloured liquid, not readily absorbed by the clothing and not in the least like a true diarrhoeal motion. Alternatively an enormous evacuation of hard and soft faeces may result. Faecal impaction thus commonly presents itself either as faecal incontinence or, deceptively, as diarrhoea which conceals the true state of affairs. As Dr. John Warren observed nearly 200 years ago, this bowel looseness 'does not yield to any remedy administered under the supposition of its being only a purging.'[3]

Fig. 2. X-ray of colon (same patient as Fig. 1) after emptying with Dulcolax suppositories—note linear shadowing from residue in appendix.

Diagnosis of Faecal Impaction

Diagnosis of faecal impaction is aided by awareness of the frequency of its occurrence in old people. Symptoms suggesting impaction may be entirely absent and an enema may produce no result if the mass is wedged in position. Alternatively, an enema may give an apparently satisfactory result, but still leave the main impaction untouched. Constipation or evidence of inadequate evacuation may be present. Rectal distension may cause complaint, though in a senile patient restlessness and cot-climbing may indicate the discomfort. As Heberden observed, urinary difficulty and acute retention may occur.

Physical signs include abdominal fullness with presence of a mass which may change in position or disappear in a day or two. The anus may be everted and at times may show the faecal cone protruding.

Highly coloured faeces, adherent to the skin and clothes, are a suggestive sign. Digital examination of the rectum is generally conclusive. The loading is characteristic, though sometimes a rounded mass, shaped like a ball-valve, is present. When this is pushed upwards or to one side, a gush of thick faecal fluid will appear. Rarely, this ball-valve may be placed just out of the finger's reach, in which case the rectum itself may be empty.

Management of Impaction

It is very clear from the foregoing that the only correct treatment of a faecal incontinence of this nature is to overcome the faecal impaction which has given rise to it; similarly, avoidance of recurrence depends upon preventive measures designed to avoid chronic constipation and ensure proper evacuation of the lower bowel. As long as the impaction is massive and the bowel blockage nearly complete, oral attempts by giving aperients are likely to be dangerous, while enema administration will probably be ineffective.

The only satisfactory method is to disimpact the rectum manually, the procedure being carried out with great care to avoid causing the patient pain, shock or damage to the mucosa of the lower bowel. The gentle use of enema fluid to help dislodge the fragments may help the manoeuvre. When some of the mucus membrane is exposed, one or two Dulcolax suppositories should be inserted as high as possible into the rectum, care being taken not to imbed them in a faecal mass, in which case they may fail to act. After 20 minutes the patient should attempt defaecation. On the night of this disimpaction, the patient should be given two Dulcolax tablets by the mouth, and another rectal examination performed next morning. If a further rectal blockage has occurred, another manual removal may be needed. However, should the bowel be partly empty, or the motion soft, once again two Dulcolax suppositories should be inserted high up, and further efforts at emptying the bowel made in 20 minutes.

It is important to realize that a course of treatment lasting up to three weeks, comprising daily rectal examinations, manual removal of hard faeces as often as necessary, and regular administration of Dulcolax tablets and suppositories, may be required before the colon can be completely cleared. For the first few days incontinence may continue, until the patulous anus regains its normal muscular tone. Usually enemata can be done without, although there are a few cases where simple enemata seem more effective than suppositories, while in other cases of a stubborn nature, retention enemata of olive oil may seem necessary. Again, some patients seem to do better with oral Senokot tablets, while others react better to Dulcolax.

Prevention

It is extremely difficult to prevent recurrence in every case, as faecal accumulation can take place so gradually and silently. All the usual methods of preventing constipation in old age, directed towards the causes set out above, should be used, particular attention being directed towards re-establishment of bowel habit and confidence on the part of the nurse or the family that, with modern methods, bowel regularity can be ensured. Strong purges should be avoided as these empty the bowel too thoroughly and disturb its routine. Until bowel habit has been fully established, the use of a commode is preferable to a WC, as the attendant can then see how much faeces have been evacuated and management arranged around this observation.

DURING ANAESTHESIA . . .

. . . the patient hands over his body and his personality to his doctors and nurses and gives them a tremendous responsibility. Dr. Brian Johnson, consultant anaesthetist, discusses the duties of the nurse with the anaesthetized patient in a Nursing Times reprint THE NURSE AND THE ANAESTHETIC, price 2s. 3d., postage 4d., from the Manager, Nursing Times, St. Martin's Street, London, W.C.2.

Other Causes of Faecal Incontinence

There are of course other causes of this condition, though with increasing awareness of the frequency of faecal impaction it will be found that these other causes have less often to be incriminated. Local trauma of the anal sphincter following rectal operations and childbirth is an occasional cause, while in disseminated sclerosis and other organic spinal cord lesions, a true incontinence may rarely occur. More frequent is gross behaviour disorder in senile dementia where the patient's bowel and nervous reflexes are sound, but he is unaware of his surroundings or unwilling to restrain himself when an urge to defaecate arises. In such cases, normal motions are passed into the clothes or on to the floor.

In all these conditions, however, faecal impaction may easily co-exist and an approach to the problem as set out above can result in great improvement. Even if no impaction is present, the aperient-suppository routine can be used to produce what can be called 'controlled (or timed) defaecation', the natural call to stool being anticipated by the insertion of one or two suppositories while the nurse and commode are both at hand. The same method is in use in some geriatric wards, where WCs are inadequate in number. Routine defaecation of senile patients can thus be timed in accordance with the availability of lavatories, and not left entirely to chance.

Twenty-two Nursing Procedures

PART 3. EMERGENCY PROCEDURES (contd.)

The colour of any cylinder must always be checked before use.

Twenty-two Nursing Procedures is a booklet published by the Wessex Regional Hospital Board (see also Nursing Times, October 6, 13 and 20).

The flowmeter is adjusted to read between 8 to 10 litres per minute.

PROCEDURE N—OXYGEN ADMINISTRATION

This is a CATEGORY II procedure which can be performed by trained NHSR Auxiliaries under supervision of a doctor or State-registered nurse.

1. Equipment Required:
   (1) BLB mask (Boothby, Lovelace and Bulbulian).
   (2) Rubber tubing from mask to flowmeter.
   (3) Flowmeter.
   (4) Reducing valve and gauge.
   (5) Oxygen cylinder (upper part—white; lower part—black).
   (6) Spanner.

2. Object:
   To give patient oxygen to breathe.

3. Information:
   (a) The Oxygen Cylinder.
   There is a special colour code for all medical gas cylinders (see illustration at end of book). The oxygen colour code is UPPER THIRD—WHITE, AND LOWER PART—BLACK.
   THE COLOUR OF ANY CYLINDER MUST ALWAYS BE CHECKED BEFORE USE.
   The oxygen apparatus consists of:
   The BLB mask and bag which indicates the rate and depth of respiration. The mask has a metal stud in the face-piece which can be removed for the insertion of a gastric tube and spigot at the bottom of the bag to allow removal of condensed vapour.
   The oxygen cylinder is connected to the mask by 7 ft. of rubber tubing.
   A flowmeter is included at the cylinder head to show the rate of flow.

PROCEDURE N (contd.)

To ensure a constant pressure a reducing valve is included in the circuit.

Polythene Mask—a light compact mask which is connected to the oxygen cylinder by polythene tubing, but no re-breathing bag.

NOTE—Oxygen is essential to the life of the body cells and is needed for the combustion of food and for providing heat and energy. Oxygen deficiency may be shown by (i) shortness of breath or (ii) cyanosis (blueness of skin). The main causes in mass casualties are (i) injuries to the chest; (ii) severe haemorrhage; (iii) shock.

4. Method:

To Administer Oxygen

(a) Ensure that the flowmeter and reducing valve are firmly connected to the cylinder; tighten by using the spanner.
(b) Connect the mask and rubber tubing to the nipple just behind the flowmeter.
(c) Ensure that all joints are secure and then
(d) Open the valve on the cylinder by a full half turn.
(e) Adjust the flowmeter by the control to read between 8 to 10 litres per minute on the green scale.
(f) Put the mask on the patient and secure it.
(g) Ensure that there is nothing causing obstruction to the flow of oxygen, e.g. a kink in the tube. When using the BLB mask ensure that the bag is expanding and contracting as the patient breathes.

SEE THAT THE FOLLOWING PRECAUTIONS ARE CARRIED OUT:

(a) No smoking near the cylinder.
(b) No oil stove or naked flame in the vicinity.
(c) The joints of the apparatus MUST NOT be greased.
(d) Methylated spirits or rubbing oils MUST NOT be used.
(e) Used cylinders should be marked 'EMPTY' and removed from the ward.
(f) ALWAYS CHECK THE COLOUR OF THE CYLINDER BEFORE USE.

After the patient's nostrils have been cleaned, a gastric tube is passed.

After aspiration, the stomach contents are measured and the quantity recorded.

PROCEDURE O—PASSAGE OF GASTRIC TUBE

This is a CATEGORY II procedure which can be performed by trained NHSR Auxiliaries under the supervision of a doctor or State-registered nurse.

1. Equipment Required:

(1) Tray.
(2) Clean gastric tube in container of warm water.
(3) Lubricant.
(4) Gauze swabs.
(5) Adhesive strapping.
(6) Scissors.
(7) Receiver containing 20 ml. syringe.
(8) Container with clean water.
(9) Graduated measure.
(10) Receiver for used swabs.
(11) Spigot for tube.
(12) Jaconet.

2. Object:

To pass a gastric tube and aspirate gastric contents. The aim of this procedure is to empty the stomach of its contents and to keep it empty for as long as necessary.

3. Method:

PASSING THE TUBE.

The patient is told what is to be done and the co-operation required from him. He is propped up in a comfortable position. The nurse washes and dries her hands. The patient's nostrils are cleaned and the tube is inserted, the patient being told to breathe deeply and swallow when asked. If the patient coughs or becomes cyanosed the tube is withdrawn immediately.

When the tube has passed 18—20 inches it will be in the stomach.

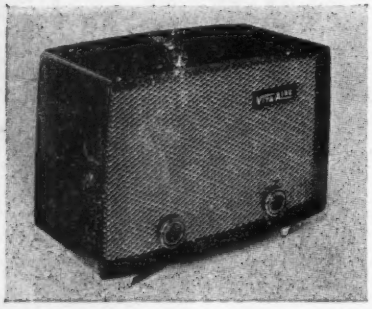
With the 20 ml. syringe some of the stomach contents are drawn off and their acidity tested with litmus paper. The stomach contents are aspirated and measured and the quantity entered on a chart.

If the tube is to remain in position the spigot is inserted in the end of the tube which is then strapped to the cheek. Aspiration of the stomach contents is repeated at intervals. After each aspiration the syringe is washed in cold water. The tube is removed by withdrawing it gently through a swab. The nostrils are then dried.

THE TECHNIQUE FOR PASSING THE TUBE BY MOUTH IS SIMILAR.

New Air Purifier

THE VITA-AIRE MACHINE, a new air purifier now available in this country, is claimed to eliminate airborne cross-infection as well as odours, smoke, dust, dirt, gases and impure carbon particles. The impurities are oxidized and destroyed within a few seconds by a process of negative ionisation. Based on the photo-electric principles, Vita-Aire operates in an ultra-violet field, producing a flow of negatively ionised air, the output being easily variable. The machines are produced in this country by Thermotank Ltd. by agreement with the Vita-Aire Process Co. Inc., USA. They have been used in several hospitals in America particularly in the treatment of burns and diseases of the chest. It will be interesting to hear of their use by our hospitals.



TALKING POINT

AT LAST a doctor has admitted in public that patients get better more quickly on their own. Not from a serious illness, of course, but from things like mild influenza, and the common cold or chill. The doctor is Dr. Kenneth Hutchin, and he makes this confession in an article in the October number of Family Doctor entitled 'Is your absence really necessary?'.

I hope nurses will read this article, because it applies to them as much as to anyone else. It is mainly concerned about the wide variations in the time different people take to recover from the same illness, and there is a good deal of discussion of motivation, morale and their part in deciding the length of an illness.

The majority of nurses are very highly motivated indeed, and we all know the nurse who will not report sick until she falls down in the ward and then staggers back on duty as soon as she can persuade her doctor she has recovered.

On the other hand, our nurse and hospital administrators have, with perverse ingenuity, evolved a system that ensures that sickness absence of non-resident staff is kept at a much higher level than would otherwise be the case. They insist on a doctor's certificate for any illness that lasts for more than three days, and in many hospitals nurses are wise to obtain a certificate for an illness lasting only three days. Otherwise their tale of woe when they return may be greeted by scepticism.

So they go and see their doctors. They go, not for treatment, but for a certificate. General practitioners are grossly overworked as it is and they hardly welcome all this certificate-signing. But what can they do about it? The nation has been told that there is a highly trained doctor available to treat every snuffle and the nation intends to see that its every snuffle is treated by a highly trained doctor.

And then, as Dr. Hutchin points out in his article, doctors have to allow a wide margin of safety. They are responsible if anything goes wrong. So instead of three days off, you get a week, or a fortnight, whether you want it or not, because you cannot go back to the hospital without a final certificate. And instead of paying for your aspirin direct out of your own pocket, you pay for it as a taxpayer, plus the cost of the time taken by the doctor to write the prescription, plus the cost of all the clerks and book-keepers who have to handle it before the chemist who dispensed it can be paid by the NHS.

It seems to me that it would be much better if the public, including nurses, could somehow be allowed and taught to treat their own minor ills, and permitted to stay away from work for up to a week without a certificate. It would be quite easy for a competent statistician to spot any pockets of abuse, the doctors would have more time to look after the really ill patients, and they might have time and patience to help all the emotionally ill people there are in the community. It would also save the NHS a great deal of money.

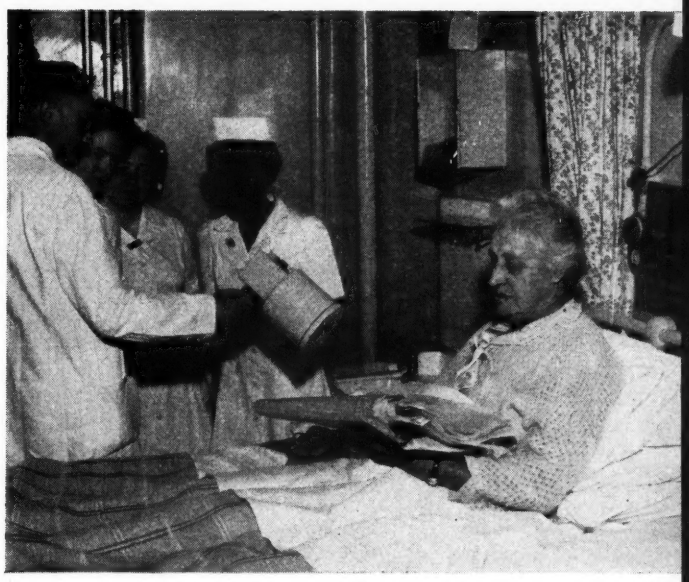
PEOPLE IN HOSPITAL

I. From the Outside

What do people feel about going into hospital? This first extract from 'People in Hospital' by Elizabeth Barnes (formerly an assistant editor of the 'Nursing Times') gives part of the answer. The book is based on the findings of the International Study of Psychological Problems in General Hospitals, and will be published by Macmillan and Co. Ltd. at 12s. 6d., next week.



'Modern medicine can, to the uninitiated, seem truly miraculous. But . . . the modern doctors and their helpers can appear and become, mysterious and remote.'

PEOPLE work in general hospitals because they want to; they go as patients because they must.

Hospitals provide specialist medical services for the sick and an environment in which these services can be carried out. This is their one purpose. Some train doctors and nurses and other medical and administrative workers, some carry out medical research—these are extensions to the central purpose.

But illness creates personal anxiety and fear. Anxious and frightened people tend to amplify the power and knowledge of those they turn to for help, sometimes to the point of idolatry. The reality of the purpose of the hospital becomes distorted by the idealized expectations of those who use it. And it is this conflict between the reality of what the hospital provides and people's expectations of what it provides, or should provide, which seems to generate the human problems of patients and staff in their interaction with each other. How some of these problems arise in the various areas and situations in hospital, and what can be done about them, was the main focus of interest of the study groups and the expert group who took part in the international study*.

Reactions to Illness—and Hospital

What sick people feel about coming into hospital received a good deal of attention. The prospect, it seems, looms long before one finds oneself in a hospital bed, even before one becomes ill. It takes shape in the gossip of the market place, over the garden fence, in the newspapers, through radio and the cinema. It comes into the secret games of children.

Illness usually comes as a shock. No healthy person expects it. The study groups recognized illness as a threat to personal stability, a breakdown of defences which creates a need to drop the ordinary give and take of adult life, to hide away and be protected and cared for. Up to a certain point, it was seen, the sick person copes with his illness himself; beyond that point he calls in others.

[Eventually] the hospital takes over. It removes the sick person from the community, puts him to bed, feeds him, tends to his body, regulates his life and gives him protection. But it provides this protective shelter only for its own purpose—to carry out the specialist medical services which cannot be given outside. 'Patients do not exist, as far as the hospital is concerned, until they appear within its walls', a member of the expert group observed, 'and they cease to exist once they have left'.

But to the patient, going to hospital is a significant event —the end, often, of an episode of growing failure to cope with the disorder and distress of his illness. While hospitalization offers relief, patients become anxious, if not actually frightened, about placing themselves in the hands of people who can cope with something they themselves cannot and who, for better or worse, must now be trusted. They sometimes attach their fears to one aspect of their hospitalization, to one symptom of the illness, to fantasies about the people and the sights, sounds and smells of hospitals, to worries about the family to be left behind, to the loss of earnings coupled, in some countries, with the enormous cost of hospital treatment. Sometimes they are just 'frightened by the whole idea'.

Illness, it seems, is more than a broken bone, a sudden pain or a subtle change in body function and appearance, it becomes surrounded and coloured by all kinds of emotional and social implications. It can become equated with uselessness, ignorance, stupidity, poverty or sin; just as health can become equated with usefulness, knowledge, sense, material well-being and goodness. (cont. over)

General hospital staff and mental health workers met in small, informal groups in Europe and North America to discuss some problems they encountered in everyday life in hospital. The expert group consisted of psychologists and sociologists.*

'The very first requirement of a hospital is that it should do the sick no harm'*. The principle still holds good today, if for somewhat different reasons. Modern medicine can, to the uninitiated, seem truly miraculous. But, perhaps for that very reason, the modern doctors and their helpers can appear, and become, mysterious and remote from the subjects on which they practice, especially when those subjects are expecting more than technical medical skill.

'A Right to Health'

Health has become one of the rights of man; illness is something to be conquered. There is less free treatment. More patients are paying for what they get, either directly or through insurance and taxation. One study group discovered that even poor and illiterate patients who have paid perhaps only one insurance contribution believe, because they have been encouraged to believe, that they have a right to all the hospital has to offer—its medical services and its protective environment—for as long as they themselves feel they need it. Patients, it seems, are becoming more and more people who feel they know what they are entitled to and who intend to see that they get it. But they are, all the same, sick people going through a time of confusion and stress. At such times, the ability to judge events by adult reason notoriously gives way to childhood fantasy, to the erection of myths about the hospital and to popular hearsay. And the image of the hospital and those who work there becomes based more on these irrational things than on reality. A hospital chaplain in one study group thought:

> the human need for magic, which is not satisfied in this materialistic age, is expressed in these notions.

How is this image created? Firstly, it seems, like all other images these days, through mass communications. The popular press was strongly criticized by study groups in some countries for being interested only in hospital scandals and cases of negligence. But on further reflection it was recognized that the popular press has a shrewd idea of what people like to read—anything which appeals to their sense of wonder for the unknown, the unfamiliar and the unexpected and to their need to believe in the unbelievable. Stories involving hospitals, therefore, are always news. A new surgical technique, a vaccine or a new drug which brings hope to the previously incurable, becomes a sensational news item. And the public appetite for hospital news is fed by such stories as much as by scandalous tittle-tattle.

Intense Public Interest

Hospitals, then, become important institutions in the community. What happens in them is of public interest—so intense, many study groups believed, that it cannot be silenced however much hospitals and their staffs may wish for anonymity.

The image becomes more intense and urgent when it comes nearer home and involves oneself and one's immediate circle. It is perpetuated most firmly, perhaps, during the gossip of the day. Many patients interviewed by study groups in all countries, especially patients in hospital for the first time, seemed to have developed their picture of hospital life from the 'travellers' tales' of ex-patients and their visitors.

A Fearsome and Wondrous Place

The hospital becomes a fearsome place where strange, unaccountable and painful things are done to one's body, and at the same time a wondrous place where skilled hands and marvellous minds, far more skilled and marvellous than those of ordinary mortals, bring about magical relief and cure.

Unlike other public images which are created deliberately to present the 'product' to the 'consumer' in a favourable light, the hospital's image is created inadvertently. Very few hospitals, it seems, attempt to adapt the skills of modern public relations or to use the intense public interest in their doings to present themselves positively to the people they serve. [Several study groups] and the expert group agreed that some publicity from the hospital about the non-medical aspects of hospital life might help to combat the prospective patients' fears by answering them realistically.

At the present time the image presented is left mainly to chance. When a patient comes to hospital, therefore, he brings not only his illness and all the problems this creates in his life, he brings his fantasies and fears and his own personalized image of the hospital. The realities of hospital life are tested against these from the moment he enters the door and consume much of the attention he might otherwise be giving to the part he could play in his treatment.

Crisis in London

THE SUGGESTION that the London teaching hospitals might expand their maternity departments to help meet the acute shortage of maternity beds in the London area was made in a leading article in The Lancet for October 14.

According to The Lancet, London needs another 200 to 300 maternity beds at once, along with midwives to staff them. It was suggested that the teaching hospitals, especially those with both medical students and pupil midwives, might help, as they are usually more adequately staffed than other hospitals.

Other suggestions made in the leading article included more pay for midwives—'if all midwives who qualified could be persuaded to stay in the service for only one year, the shortage would be largely relieved'—and the establishment of two emergency units in North and South London, with about 75 beds each, in some disused hospital or institution. More should also be done to encourage married midwives to return part-time to either hospital or domiciliary work.

Urgency was the keynote of the whole article. The situation, The Lancet said, should be regarded 'as a state of emergency such as existed at the beginning of the last war. . . . All these things need to be tackled now and not in a few years' time.'

Nursing with NATO for the RAF

THE RAF HOSPITAL, WEGBERG, North Germany, provides the hospital services which are an important aspect of facilities and amenities available in almost bewildering variety to Forces personnel and their families at the adjacent huge NATO Tactical Air Force Camp, Rheindahlen II. The camp, with its population of some 16,000, is rather like one of our New Towns—though more widely spaced out (it has 20 miles of roads, with large areas of grass and trees, including various sports fields and a golf course). It is truly international; besides the RAF and their sister service, the WRAF, it includes elements of the Belgian, Dutch and German Air Forces, and some military units also, not to mention the hundreds of civilians employed.

But the catchment area for Wegberg Hospital is even wider; it also serves RAF personnel and their families in scattered units throughout a large area of this part of North Germany. And this is reflected in the separate accommodation for 'waiting mothers' in the hospital's maternity unit; many have to come long distances from isolated spots, so they come into hospital a week or two before their babies are expected, attending the antenatal clinics available to all Service wives at the camp. Premature babies are cared for, and exchange transfusions can be carried out for Rhesus babies. There is a small blood bank, and if more blood of any particular group is needed a loud-hailer broadcast brings prompt response from the RAF and other personnel on the camp's blood donor panel.

Wegberg Hospital is a general acute hospital of 260 beds, undertaking a full range of surgery, except selective chest and selective head conditions. These, and other patients needing long-term care, are flown home to specialist centres by the Casevac service.

Cars are cheap in Germany and many young members of the RAF acquire a car, often a high-powered one; straight roads tempt to high speeds, and unfortunately the accident rate is high. Casualties—whether air, road, or from other accidents—can be dealt with in a special 'crash room' at the hospital, with its full range of resuscitation equipment kept always at the ready.

Naturally, the patient population of such a hospital as Wegberg comes almost entirely from the younger age groups—predominantly the RAF and their families—and this contributes to a buoyant, hopeful atmosphere. Medical and surgical cases are nursed together in the families' wards and in the officers' wards, but separately in the airmen's wards where larger numbers justify it. The delightful children's ward is brightened by murals painted by one of the male nursing orderlies (previously a commercial artist), and the children's day-room opens on to a garden with plenty of toys for up-patients to play with, while baby patients are parked out in prams.

Nurse Training

Fully approved SRN training is provided at Wegberg; at present there are 16 student nurses and they will be flown home to take their GNC State examinations in due course. There is also the one-year training as nursing attendant, with a preliminary examination after six months and final examination at the end of a year, both examinations qualifying for Service promotion and pay increases if passed. Airwomen and airmen taking this training attend lectures, but do not move round the wards for varied experience as do the student nurses. Some of the WRAF, however, go on to full general training with a view to commissioned rank in PMRAFNS if suitable. Nursing orderlies usefully augment the staff, and there are also a number of civilian German nursing assistants.

Within Rheindahlen Camp itself, the Sick Quarters present some unusual features. In addition to the daily morning sick parade, there is a full range of clinic services for Forces personnel and families, as afforded by any typical health centre—antenatal, mother and baby, dental and chiropody clinics and sight and hearing testing facilities, as well as the usual protective inoculations for children and adults. These include special immunizations for those posted to tropical countries and, as all inoculations are now voluntary under peacetime conditions, tactful publicity on the subject forms part of the health teaching. Two general practitioners (one a German civilian doctor) work at Sick Quarters, arranging admission to Wegberg Hospital for any patients who need it, and paying domiciliary visits to married quarters, sick bays, etc., between clinics and surgeries. SSAFA nursing sisters act as district nurses and also take over the home visiting of maternity patients after discharge from the hospital. Sisters of PMRAFNS head the nursing staff at Sick Quarters, and among the non-trained nursing staff is a German nursing assistant who hopes to come to England for further training.

Casevac Service

The RAF Sick Quarters at Wildenrath Air Station collaborate in the thrice-weekly regular Casevac (casualty evacuation) flights. Wegberg Hospital acts as collecting centre for these patients who are taken by ambulance to the plane waiting on the airstrip. Small planes are used for economic reasons (high altitude flying is unsuitable, and patients are normally few). To supplement the scheduled Casevac flights, however, planes can be laid on on other days if needed. Patients are escorted by a PMRAFNS sister or nursing attendant, according to the seriousness of the case; medical equipment carried includes a Beaver respirator. Nursing escorts are trained in applying safety and rescue precautions for possibly helpless patients, and it is impressive to see the ambulance and fire-fighting tender which escort the Casevac plane as it taxies gently forward, so as to be prompt with help in case of any mishap at take-off.

All these medical and nursing services available for this large NATO camp at Rheindahlen, and associated units round about, appear to form a remarkably well-integrated service—with a quite remarkable absence of official red tape. Everywhere, cheerfulness, enthusiasm and high morale convey the impression of a 'happy ship'—though perhaps, on second thoughts, the RAF would prefer it to be called a 'happy kite'!

FILM APPRAISALS

We are the Lambeth Boys

16 mm., sound, black and white, 55 minutes. Great Britain 1959. Ford Film Unit (director Karel Roisz). Ford Film Library, 135/147, Cheapside, London, E.C.2.

A study of teenage life in South London. Most of the film is shot in a youth club and members are seen discussing current problems, dancing, a cricket match, etc. Also, strangely diminished, we see them trapped in their dull routine jobs.

A fascinating film, beautifully photographed. It should be noted that all these teenagers are extremely normal. Difficult adolescents do not join youth clubs perhaps? It is a little too long and slow moving for regular showing.

Audience: study days; youth club leaders; anyone who has to deal with adolescents.

Up to Date

16 mm., sound, colour, 10 minutes. Great Britain 1959. Lilia White (Sales) Ltd., Bessemer Road, Welwyn Garden City, Herts.

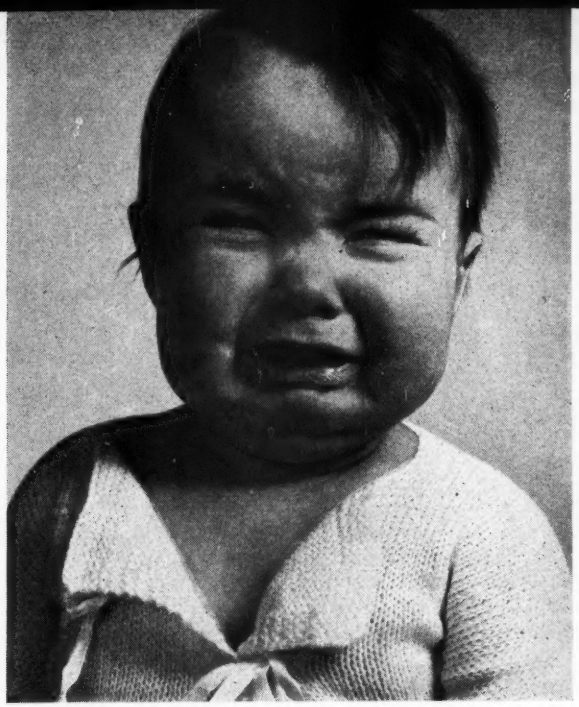
A very brief and simple explanation of ovulation and menstruation, followed by discussion on the use of tampons. The superior preparation of one type or another is demonstrated.

Although primarily an advertising film, this could be shown as an example of teenage health education. Some authorities would not agree with the use of tampons in any case and would not wish to show it, but it is an inoffensive little film if one of this type is required.

Audience: schoolgirls; health teachers as an example.

The Crying Baby

GERALD SLOT, M.D., M.R.C.P., D.P.H.,
Consulting Paediatrician, South East Metropolitan Regional Hospital Board



Babies cry frequently, but it is not always easy to know why. In this article Dr. Slot discusses some of the more common causes of crying in babies.

THE NEWBORN CHILD has only its cry as a means of expression. Crying is produced by air being forced through the vocal cords, consequently the nature of a cry will give an indication of lung capacity, of the strength and co-ordination of the respiratory muscles and the laryngeal structure. To produce a satisfactory cry there must be a good expiratory action; this demands that the intercostal muscles and diaphragm, which by their contraction force air through the bronchi to the trachea and through the larynx, must be in good working order.

The Wrong Sort of Cry

If the brain has been damaged by haemorrhage or drugs, or some congenital abnormality, a feeble whimpering cry is produced. Obstruction in the larynx, called a stridor, will cause the wrong sort of cry. Some of the causes of the more common stridors are (1) a cyst, which causes a whistling type of respiration —it can be removed by an ENT surgeon without much trouble; (2) a loose epiglottis; (3) a webbed larynx; (4) paralysis of the vocal cords; (5) laryngeal stridor, usually inspiratory—this may be present from birth, is without symptoms and may persist for six to 18 months; no treatment is required but some cases need extra care in feeding; (6) some cases of congenital heart disease; a large tongue or a very small lower jaw are at times associated with stridor; (7) laryngeal infection may also cause stridor. Acute tracheo-bronchitis is a serious condition. It may be viral, but is often due to a staphylococcal infection and is an emergency. The child is very ill, with dyspnoea, croup and dysphagia. Immediate intravenous antibiotic, or, if a staphylococcal infection is present, Celbinin, is indicated. There are, of course, other more uncommon causes, but never forget the possibility of a foreign body even in the youngest child. Thus it will be seen that the cry of a child is an important diagnostic sign.

Based on a lecture given to a Royal College of Midwives Refresher Course.

Other Common Causes

Now to other causes. Hunger can be recognized by the fact that crying does not stop when the child is picked up. Hunger may also cause pain. Some babies will shriek persistently when they are hungry but others do not mind waiting for their food. Some breast fed babies will take their milk easily and have no difficulty in sucking; some babies need more food than others and a strict schedule cannot be laid down. Mothers must use their instinct and common sense. Some babies will scream when they approach the breast and this may give them satisfaction. Colic is a common and inexplicable cause of crying in the first three months of life. In the first attack, a few days after birth, the face becomes red, the legs are drawn up and the child emits cries of pain. This may last ten minutes. Just as the attack ends, often with sobbing, it recurs and continues to recur at intervals. Picking up the child does not help. Much gurgling is heard in the abdomen and a good deal of wind is passed with variable amount of relief. The attacks may occur nightly but usually cease at the age of three months.

Many explanations have been offered. Some have suggested that premature babies suffer from this more than normal ones; some feel it has parental causes due to tension, but with Illingworth I feel that the tension is caused by the colic and not vice versa. It is probable that, as with fat digestion, some human babies at birth are not competent to deal with the new demands and that the fermentation of breast milk produces a good deal of intestinal gas which is caught in the loops of the

FLUID BALANCE

'Discuss the importance of recording fluid intake and output. By what methods may fluids be given in the post-operative period? Mention the advantages and disadvantages of each method.'

Student nurses who possess a copy of the Nursing Times reprint 'Fluid Balance' by Dr. Warren would have had no difficulty with this question from the October State Final surgery paper. It will doubtless appear again, in a slightly different form, in another Final examination paper.

Obtainable from the Manager, Nursing Times, St. Martin's Street, W.C.2, 2s. 3d., postage 4d.

intestine and the effort to overcome this obstruction leads to colic. This conclusion is reached by Brenneman after an extensive study. There is no evidence that overfeeding causes the pain, and confusion is sometimes caused by the fact that sucking will relieve the condition. Many drugs have been used; carminatives, dill water, bismuth, and even whisky has been suggested. Picking the child up, if this stops the screaming, even though a habit is formed that has to be broken later, and increasing doses of chloral until sleep is produced, would seem to be the best remedy.

To come to some more general reasons for crying. There is no doubt that a rigid feeding schedule will lead to crying in many babies, and though there is no reason to wake a baby for a feed, there is also no point in letting him cry if he is hungry. Babies are not all alike. If the baby is on a four-hour schedule, which is normal for a full-term child, there is no point in dropping everything if he wakes a little earlier and cries—he can cry for a little while, but do not leave him too long. Do not feed a baby every time he cries, only when he is hungry. Of course with a sick or premature child, the above does not apply; they should be fed in a routine way.

Crying in the New-born

Crying in the new-born when put to the breast often gives rise to great anxiety. This behaviour starts in the very early days. Illingworth describes the behaviour with great accuracy, and I quote: 'However hungry the baby is, he sucks for a minute or two or merely touches the breast with his lips; he then withdraws and screams or else refuses the breast altogether. Holding or forcing him merely makes the position worse. The mother is often afraid she will be hurt and jumps back. This annoys the baby and he cries. Unless a great deal of patience is exercised he may not obtain enough milk and so will not gain weight'. Some say that this behaviour is due to 'the milk not suiting the baby', others that the mother has not enough milk. Both these assumptions are wrong. Personality is probably the cause and Illingworth points out that such babies rarely turn out to be placid children. It must be stressed in these cases that there is nothing to worry about, only patience helps. Feed him as he needs it, give plenty of cuddling and love and remember the condition is self-limiting and will usually clear up in 10—12 days.

Many mothers fear to show their love for their baby in case they spoil him. This fear is groundless and no baby should be left for a long time for fear of spoiling. If he is picked up when he wants it he is likely in most cases to become less rather than more demanding. Insecurity and refusal to let mother out of sight is more likely to be the fate of children who are denied mother love.

Recognizing the Causes

Crying is a complex action. The causes—satisfaction, hunger, pain, rage—must be distinguished. The whimpering cry of the weak baby, the hydrocephalic cry and the eerie cry of the mental defect must all be heard to be appreciated.

Crying is also a method of overcoming frustration in the baby. Winnicott describes how an infant uses his fist or fingers to stifle a cry. He compares screaming to a fist that comes up from inside. You can hold the baby's hands—but you cannot pin his crying down into his stomach. It is worthy of note that the new-born baby does not have tears; these appear between 4 and 6 weeks.

As in all medical conditions diagnosis must precede treatment. Consider the common causes first—common things are common—and even the youngest babies vary greatly in personality. It necessarily takes time for the mother and baby to get to know one another, but with increasing intimacy, understanding between these two is reached and a mixture of science and intuition will yield the answer—proving yet once again that medicine is an art.

Which Baby Milk?

THE AUGUST ISSUE of Which? (journal of the Consumers' Association Ltd.) has an article on 'Baby Milk'. Five proprietary brands of dried milk powders, National Dried Milk, and four brands of evaporated milk with vitamin D supplements, were tested.

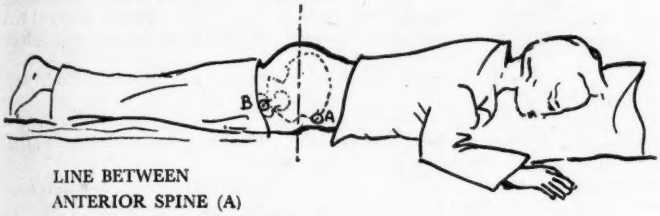
National Dried Milk (with Welfare milk tokens, 2s. 4d. for a 20 oz. tin) is recommended as the best buy. Of the proprietary powders, C.A. thinks that the cheapest of the powders, Ostermilk No. 2 and Cow and Gate G Brand, are good foods for babies. The most expensive of the powders, S.M.A. and Trufood Humanised, they say, have advantages which are not normally sufficient to make the dearer powders a better buy.

The evaporated milks were found to have a number of advantages. They were all virtually sterile, and since they come in small tins, the risk of contamination, once the tin is opened, is small. They are easy to prepare and, once prepared, remain stable and homogeneous. However, the evaporated milks are all slightly dearer than the cheapest of the powders.

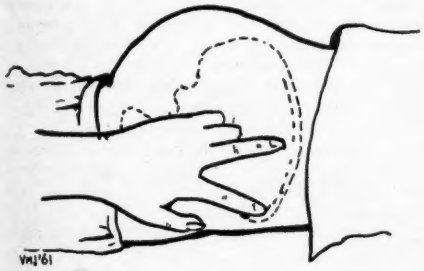
Intramuscular Injections

For injections of more than a few ml. of most drugs the intramuscular route is preferable to the subcutaneous. Intramuscular injections are less painful, more rapidly absorbed, and less liable to leave nodules or 'sterile abscesses'. So states an article, 'Intramuscular Injections', in the British Medical Journal of September 16.

It goes on to advocate the anterior (ventral) part of the upper and outer quadrant of the buttock as the best site for injection. The deltoid muscle, the antero-lateral compartment of the mid-thigh, and the upper and outer triangle of the buttock, all have hazards as sites for such injections. However, 'the gluteus medius and minimus muscles in the anterior gluteal site provide a greater thickness of muscle than does the more posterior gluteus maximus. It contains no important nerves or blood vessels and a too deep injection into it can reach only bone. Also there is less subcutaneous fat than posteriorly and so less risk of the injection becoming subcutaneous. It is an area less likely to faecal contamination.'



LINE BETWEEN
ANTERIOR SPINE (A)
AND GREAT TROCHANTER (B)

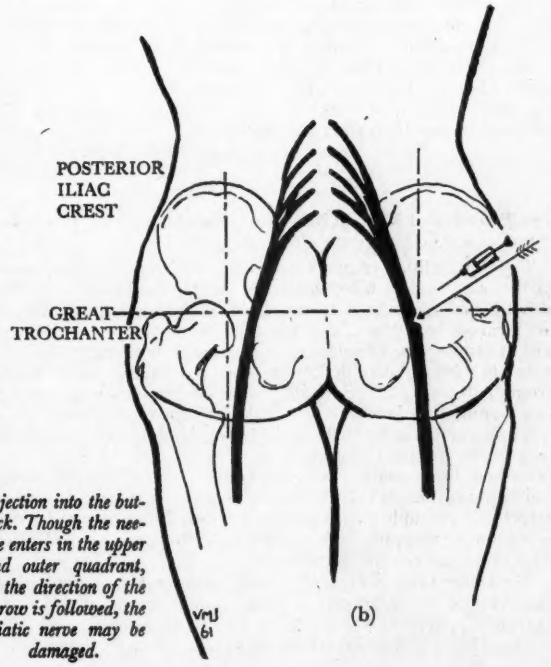


Injection into the anterior gluteal site.

Injection into the deltoid. A rolled-up sleeve does not uncover the deltoid muscle; if the jacket is not taken off, there is risk of injecting the musculo-spiral nerve.

It is pointed out that the site of a ventral gluteal injection is found easily by palpation: thus 'for a right-handed operator injecting the right buttock the left index finger be placed vertically with its tip on the anterior superior iliac spine and the middle finger abducted (as in Sir Winston Churchill's V for victory sign) with its tip just below the iliac crest. The injection site is then within the triangle formed by the fingers and the iliac crest'.

While the position of the patient was thought not to be of major importance, lying was preferred to standing as an injection into relaxed muscles was less painful. To avoid a painful subcutaneous injection, 'a sharp two-inch (5 cm.) needle of medium bore (20 SWG) is best'.



Injection into the buttock. Though the needle enters in the upper and outer quadrant, if the direction of the arrow is followed, the sciatic nerve may be damaged.

Book Reviews

Age is Opportunity. Prepared by the National Old People's Welfare Council (incorporating the National Council of Social Service), 8s. 6d.

This book was first published in 1949 at a time when I did not so much as know the meaning of the word 'geriatric', much less feel, as is now the case, that on my death, the word will be found graven on my heart. So the first edition was passed by and the discovery of this later one is a treat indeed.

The first chapter, which deals with the historical background of work for and with the elderly, should interest those who like to know how yesterday has become today, and the book in general can be a valuable guide to people in many branches of social work. The volunteer, whose needs are often left unrecognized, can get considerable help not only from the explanation of the needs of the elderly and the work yet to be done, but from the well compiled lists of available courses which should help her to understand better those with whom she wants to work—and perhaps herself? The administrator and the professional worker will find the list of publications, particularly the documented, if partial, list of government circulars and the bibliography of considerable value. This last is particularly well arranged under 13 headings. The chapter on current legislation clarifies what must often seem obscure to overseas workers, the workings of our welfare state; indeed they can find in this book guidance in almost every possible avenue of work with that segment of the world's population which is rapidly becoming one of the most challenging parts of modern social work.

The question of accommodation is well covered and the overseas worker will find information which should make her task the easier; at least she will be left in little doubt as to what she can not find for her client! The chapter on visiting and counselling is valuable, stressing the degree of loneliness and isolation felt by the aged. For the benefit of the untrained visitor or counsellor it might have been helpful to have discussed briefly the problem of the elderly person who, for personality reasons, cannot accept friendship and help. Lack of understanding of the reason for the rebuff given on a first visit must on some occasions have resulted in the loss of some would-be volunteers.

To mention each chapter is impossible but leisure, clubs, workshops for the elderly, training of workers, rural needs, preparation for retirement and research are all scanned. 'Scanned' is used deliberately, rather than examined, and it seems that the result is good. The object of the exercise will have been achieved if those not fully cognisant of work with the elderly are, as seems likely, encouraged to delve further into the subject.

The Practice of Mental Nursing (third edition). May Houliston, R.G.N., R.M.N. Livingstone, 10s.

The third edition of this little book is basically the same as the earlier ones. It does take account of the Mental Health Act 1959 although no mention is made of the increased responsibility of the local authority or of the new grade of psychopathic disorder. The continued use of such terms as mental deficiency, idiot and imbecile with obsolete definitions does not seem justified on the grounds that they are clinically useful especially when, although new terminology is mentioned, little attempt is made to show its value in changing attitudes or implying hope for those who can respond to special training. It is true that this book has been published in Scotland, presumably for Scottish nurses, where legislation is different. In England, mistaken impressions may be gained, for example on censoring or withholding patients' letters unless the nurse reads right to the end of the section, which alters a lot that has been previously said.

The chapters on Normal Psychology, General Symptomatology and Mental Disorder give a clear simple appraisal while the nursing is concise and should appeal to those custodians who like things in black and white, where the patient (often an illness rather than a person needing help), should fit the scheme—although never, I hope, to the extent of classifying incontinent patients as 'wet' and the 'dirty'.

Unfortunately little regard seems to be given to relationships, group discussions or therapeutic environment except at the end where some become the province of the specialist. Even here the emphasis on crafts, rather than the development of a real work situation in an industrial set-up, is not in keeping with recent trends, the nurse being a passive observer.

Many people today talk of psycho-motor automatism and deny epileptic equivalent as a valid term. The use of carbolic compresses for verminous heads without any mention of DDT, and sunlight stimulating the activity of the thyroid gland and helping the skin produce vitamins also seem open to question.

This claims to be 'the practice' of mental nursing—which of course depends upon what our conception of the work of the mental nurse is—but at the most it could be called an introduction. The foreword recommends it for nursing assistants, the author claims to have used it for junior student nurses. Certain parts could be used during the first year with the experimental mental nursing syllabus, provided they are carefully selected and the therapeutic role of the nurse added during the discussion which should follow.

Essays on the First Hundred Years of Anaesthesia. Vol. II. W. Stanley Sykes. Livingstone, 30s.

This second volume of the work that Dr. Sykes completed shortly before his death is as readable and entertaining as the first. It consists of discursive essays on such topics as the chloroform controversy (it was hotly debated in the 19th century and after whether this most powerful anaesthetic was a killer or whether the deaths which occurred were due to lack of skill), prophecies that went wrong (the surgeon, for instance, who thought surgery had reached its limit in 1873), the death of Miss Ida Wyndham, nitrous oxide's first victim, and 'thirty-seven little things which have all caused death' (nurses might take note of some of these—do you know why it is dangerous to oil an oxygen valve?).

Dr Sykes wears his learning lightly, but the task of assembling the material for these essays cannot have been a light one. It was obviously a labour of love. Few more delightful books have ever been written on an aspect of medical history.

Gosport Borough Council

Proprietary Foods in Welfare Clinics Hampshire County Council has recently decided to discontinue the sale of proprietary foods in welfare clinics. The sale of national welfare foods (dried milk, cod liver oil and orange juice) will continue but it is considered that ordinary retail shops offer adequate facilities for the sale of proprietary foods. It appears, however, that Gosport mothers have much appreciated being able to buy these proprietary foods in the welfare clinics. The sale of these foods has, in fact, proved an incentive for some to attend the clinics who would not otherwise have done so. Because of this Gosport Borough Council has decided to urge the County Council to rescind its decision.

Borough of Lyme Regis

Those Turnstiles Lyme Regis is one of the many local authorities affected by the 'great turnstile controversy'. The borough surveyor has been instructed to remove the turnstiles at The Cobb and at the Marine Parade Ladies Conveniences and to replace them with individual locks—at £20 each.

Hertfordshire County Council

Mobile Libraries In his Annual Report for 1960 the County Council's chief librarian says: 'It proves rather difficult in some places to cope with the rush of children, especially when they come straight after school and all try to choose books at once. It is not easy to find an answer to this problem; but it may prove possible to persuade them to "stagger" their visits.'

The County Council has two trailer mobile libraries each carrying a stock of 3,000 books, operating on the outskirts of Hertfordshire's new towns. Each trailer spends a whole day, including the evening, every week in each neighbourhood unit served.

This amiable litter frog helps to keep the grounds tidy at the Mid-Ulster Hospital at Magherafelt, Co. Antrim. He is especially popular with the children. The mouth is operated by a foot-pedal.

Croydon Corporation

Poliomyelitis Vaccination Croydon Corporation recently considered the implications of the national shortage of poliomyelitis vaccine which is expected to restrict materially supplies to local authorities during the coming months.

On the recommendation of the medical officer of health the Council has decided to vaccinate babies and children who have received no injections and to complete the vaccination of any other age group where only one injection has been given. Fourth injections and the vaccination of adults are to be deferred.

Holborn Metropolitan Borough Council

Juvenile Swimmers Holborn Council recently considered an unusual problem which has arisen at Holborn's 'Oasis' Swimming Pool. The baths manager/engineer reported that he was concerned about the health and well-being of children who obtain admission to the pool in the early morning and remain, often without food, throughout the day until the evening.

The Council solved the problem by placing it straight back into the lap of the manager/engineer. He is 'authorized to attempt to persuade unaccompanied children to leave the Oasis when in his discretion he considers it necessary for their well-being.'

RCN RESEARCH

Where Nurses Live

The first report that has been issued by the Royal College of Nursing on a Research Project is reviewed here by Joan Woodward, M.A., D.P.S.A. To be published next week, 'Accommodation for Nurses and Midwives' costs 7s. 6d. and is obtainable from the College.

NEXT WEEK a report with a difference appears. It is on nurses' and midwives' accommodation, and it is different from most reports in that it informs rather than recommends; it gives the facts and leaves the reader to assess them, to think for herself how some of the problems revealed can be solved. It is also 'different' because it is not the work of a committee, but the result of a questionnaire sent out by the Royal College of Nursing as part of its salary structure survey.

Most trained nurses live out (which may support the view that nursing is now a job rather than a vocation). But many hospitals are still basing their accommodation and facilities on the traditional picture. This report does not recommend—it gives facts and asks questions.

Most Nurses Live Out

The report confirms the trend towards non-residence. It shows that only a third of the nurses and midwives now employed in hospitals live on the job (student nurses were not covered by the survey). This indicates how far the hospital staffing position has moved from the traditional pattern. Only in the administrative grades does the unmarried resident woman still appear to be the representative figure. In the other grades, a large number of the women employed are both non-resident and married, and there are some grades in which men are being employed in increasing numbers.

Last year the RCN sent out questionnaires to nurses and midwives working in a selected sample of 245 hospitals in England, Scotland and Wales asking them about their duties, responsibilities and conditions of work. (Public health nurses were also circulated, but are not included in this review.) The first report on this survey, based on the answers of the 1,810 hospital nurses who replied, will be published next week.

These changes have far-reaching implications. The social and psychological factors which attract people to any job in the first place and subsequently encourage them to stay and work effectively are extremely complex. This is particularly true of nursing. In the past, those who have chosen nursing as a career have had to be not only interested in the job itself but also prepared to accept a way of life, and success in the profession has depended not only upon ability to do the job but also upon the ability to adjust to the life satisfactorily. If the pattern of one's life is determined by one's job, it is essential for the job to be completely satisfying. If it is not, life itself will cease to have much meaning.

This close association of life and work is probably one of the reasons why the vocational element in the nurse's job has been stressed so much. In many of the other social service jobs now done by women the association is not so close, and it is interesting to find that the people employed in them, women doctors and probation officers, for example, do not emphasize the vocational element in quite the same way as nurses do.

The movement away from the traditional pattern may in the long run, have a noticeable effect on attitudes to nursing. In the future, girls contemplating nursing as a career may think of it more as a way of earning a living than as a way of life, and such factors as pay, opportunities for advancement, security and the conditions and circumstances under which the work is to be done, will loom largely in their minds. No doubt this trend will be deplored by many already in the profession. However, it seems inevitable; it is impossible to put the clock back. Moreover, it is important to accept the fact that a more utilitarian approach to the job does not necessarily mean that it will be done less effectively, less conscientiously, or with less sympathy and kindness.

Change is Slow

These changes in attitude, although inevitable in the future, are not imminent. Attitudes change very slowly. The word 'image', although overworked at present, is a very useful one for the social scientist, and it is a well-known and demonstrable fact that the image of an organization or profession always lags behind the reality.

Indeed, the report itself demonstrates this. The second interesting point that emerges from it is that although two-thirds of the trained nurses are now non-resident, the type of accommodation and the facilities provided are still based on the traditional picture. They are planned to meet the needs of the resident unmarried woman. The people who do not fit into this picture, even though they are in the majority, have to do what they can to adjust to the existing situation. In many of the hospitals covered by the report, including some in which the standard of resident accommodation is very high, the arrangements for non-resident staff are makeshift and unsatisfactory.

The reason for this may be that the extent to which the situation has changed is not fully realized. But sometimes the people responsible for staff administration in some hospitals are not very anxious to make provision for non-resident staff. Their attitude is that they have been forced to employ them because of the shortage of nurses, and they regard the present situation as both temporary and unsatisfactory. Non-resident employment is fundamentally more satisfying than residential employment in that it allows people to lead a fuller and more varied life, and everything should be done to encourage it where possible.

Thinking Again

The facts emerging from the report suggest that staff needs must be reassessed. Hospitals must reconsider what their responsibilities are in the changing circumstances. The report can help them to do this, for it breaks down the problem of accommodation and facilities into their component parts.

The report indicates that there are some nurses, a small proportion of the total, who because of the nature of their jobs are required to be resident. The jobs for which residence is a condition of employment seem to vary from one hospital to another. Some of these variations depend upon the location and circumstances of the hospital. Others are obviously related to the attitude towards residence of those responsible for staff administration. The first step, therefore, is for each hospital to decide for which jobs residence is required, keeping the list to a minimum. It should also be recognized that, in what is rapidly becoming a predominantly non-resident profession, the people doing the jobs will be at a disadvantage and that the standard of accommodation offered should therefore be high enough to compensate at least in part for this disadvantage.

Value for Money

Secondly, there is a group of people who are resident by their own choice, either because they like the community life a resident job provides, or because alternative accommodation is difficult to find. In these cases the provision of accommodation can be looked upon as a 'fringe benefit', a service offered by the employer to make the employment he can offer more attractive. A case could be made out here for relating the board and lodging charge to the facilities provided. The survey shows that anomalies exist, some nurses getting far more in return for the standard deduction than others; this gives rise to dissatisfaction. Moreover, nurses homes are not necessarily the ideal provision for all the people in this group. Hospitals, like many other employers, might consider providing accommodation to rent, joining with local authorities in housing schemes, or giving assistance in the form of loans to staff wanting to purchase houses.

Facilities for Non-residents

Finally, there is the large group of non-residents for whom facilities must be provided. The survey shows that there are several hospitals in which the standard of provision for non-resident staff is lower than that enforced upon industry by the Factories Act. Conditions in offices are also now being regulated by legislation. Nurses should be at least as well provided with facilities for changing, washing, and hanging clothes, and with lavatory accommodation, as industrial or office workers.

As an employer of non-resident staff the hospital has some unique problems. It has to provide a 24-hour, seven-day service for patients. To formulate a satisfactory policy of hours and schedules of work for non-resident staff in these circumstances is not easy. Somehow, however, it must be done. If the system of working hours conflicts too drastically with the demands of domestic and social life, increased absence, fatigue and wastage are inevitable. Split duty may be unavoidable; if so, it is necessary to ensure that non-resident staff have somewhere to go during the time they are off duty if they are unable to get home. The findings of the survey suggest that this should be a room of their own. Sharing a sitting-room with resident staff can lead to bickering between the two groups. Resident staff feel that they pay for the facilities, and their use by non-resident staff is a source of irritation.

RETIREMENTS

Gravesend and North Kent Hospital, Gravesend

Miss Elizabeth Price, home sister, is retiring at the end of October after nearly 25 years' service. Will any members of staff who would like to contribute towards a presentation, please send donations to Sister Snowling.

Grimsby General Hospital

Miss Lily Plaskitt, S.R.N., S.C.M., administrative sister since 1953, is retiring after more than 42 years' service. Miss Plaskitt trained at St. Mary's Hospital, Highgate Hill, London (1919—23) and at the City of London Maternity Hospital.

Ipswich and East Suffolk Hospital, Ipswich

Mr. A. R. Hill, at present senior consultant, and for many years lecturer to the nursing staff, will be retiring in November. Many members of staff have appreciated Mr. Hill's help in the past and will no doubt like to contribute to a presentation. Please address your contributions to matron.

Letters to the Editor

REACTION TO NHSR POSTER

MADAM.—It must be nearly four years since I first saw that horrible NHSR poster that faced me once again. This time in the Nursing Times (October 6). How this poster ever passed any official scrutiny, or even who is really responsible for it I have been unable to find out. Just look at it! Those with any technical knowledge will shudder at the 'technique' of the nurses. Those who have no training turn from it in disgust. I know. At one time I drove a hospital vehicle with this poster plastered on the side. I heard the comments of the lay people of all ages. Horror and disgust, even from small boys who are not notable for squeamishness.

Surely someone must know who perpetrated this horror and something can be done to get rid of it once and for all?

FOUL MEANS OR FAIR?

MADAM.—The dividing line between 'inducement' and good old-fashioned bribery is tenuous but, if we have decided to go all out for the latter, I do hope we will be sensible and bribe the right people! The most pressing need today is for nurses who have recently completed their training. It would cost the nation very much less to give a bonus for every two years of work as a trained nurse than it would to pay each student nurse the proficiency allowance suggested.

For the sake of brevity, I must resist the temptation to enumerate the ways in which the proposed payments would increase, rather than decrease student nurse wastage. But, if any member of the Staff Side, Whitley Council reads the Nursing Times, I would be most relieved if they could indicate how such a scheme could do anything other than aggravate the present state of affairs.

MADAM.—Congratulations to Wrangler on scoring a bull's-eye (Nursing Times, October 13) on comprehensive training. However, she is a little off the mark in her final paragraph. Far from being conservative, we are so brainwashed and docile that we can be led anywhere.

Sheila Garrett has also expressed the sentiments of some of us when she says we will have to consider very carefully whether continued membership of our professional organization is justified.

I never have understood why students were paid £5 for being successful in the Preliminary State Examinations. Help them by all means—they need it, but why not make the allowance payable for success in the Final Examination, when they have much expense to meet in the form of entrance fees, registration fees and, we hope, College membership? Now, of course, we are going to the other extreme and Wrangler makes pleasant, and no doubt correct suggestions, for the use to which the allowance, under discussion, will be put, if awarded.

In the chaos of post-war years, we have overlooked the great contribution made to the service by trained staff, and I am sure no one will quarrel with the suggestion that the time has come when we should give much more consideration to the well-being of sisters and staff nurses.

We have successfully competed with industry for shorter hours and longer holidays, without acknowledging that industry is not interested in this as such, but in the award for working extra hours. Now we know nurses are using their free time to work in other spheres—why not pay them to spend this time with their patients—it would greatly benefit both? We are not unskilled in the use of words, and if 'overtime' is distasteful to us, why not, to quote a hospital administrator, call it 'extra-duty allowance'?

Whether we like it or not we are living in 1961 not 1861.

LATE LEAVE

MADAM.—In Miss Saunders' letter (October 6) she asks 'Would a student (over 21) at University agree to signing a book if she came in after 11 p.m.?'

As a student in a large university until two years ago I had to sign a book if I stayed out after 9 p.m. and had to ask for special permission to stay out after 10.30. Many training colleges for teachers have even more restrictions.

Do student nurses think the necessary rules in community life are confined only to the profession?

NURSES AND HOSPITAL DESIGN

MADAM.—On Wednesday last I visited a hospital in Surrey to see my brother aged 75, who after nine months at another hospital, had been transferred. For two days I have searched in the nursing part of my mind for a reason. I can't find one.

If my memory serves me right, the Surrey hospital was built immediately pre-war, during the war, or post-war. Naturally I was alert for modern hospital design. My visit was to the top floor, six storeys I think. The patient is near enough bed-ridden (he would be quite so were it not for the modern treatment for cerebral haemorrhage), practically speechless, but his mind is still active.

From his bed, at eye level, all he looks at is frosted glass, or in plain English, glass that you can't see through! Beyond that frosted glass, and denied him, is a wide sweep of Surrey for miles. The remainder of the most spacious windowing is plain glass. Why this barrier of frosted glass? Were nurses brought into consultation in the designing of this hospital? Surely not!

Were I in my brother's place, I would want to smash that window. If I could see beyond the glass barrier, I would have a changing panorama to watch.

What would that great administrator have to say? Of course I mean Florence Nightingale. Should she walk the ward at night, she might see sleepless eyes, drinking in the beauty of Surrey under the moon.

HOSPITAL PRACTICAL EXAMINATIONS

MADAM.—For five years now I have carried out practical examinations on the wards at Hertford County Hospital for both junior and senior students. My experience has led me firmly to the conclusion that this is the only satisfactory method of assessing a nurse's ability to put teaching into practice.

The students are examined in the wards in which they are currently working and carry out treatments which are routine for the day. These may include special treatments. In a recent examination, procedures I observed included the changing of a tracheotomy tube, the removal of sutures, the shortening of drainage tubes and the preparation and serving of meals. Students working in the operating theatre take part of their examination there and part in the ward in which they last worked. I examine students on day duty in the morning and those on night duty in the evening.

Each student has about an hour's work and it is possible to examine two or three in the same ward at one time.

Junior students assist where necessary and this provides the means of assessing the senior student's ability to organize her work and instruct her junior. Students lay up their trolleys and if time permits clear them. They are questioned on the patient's condition, treatment and prognosis.

Students prefer this method to the classroom 'practical'. They are more relaxed in that they are carrying out procedures in normal surroundings. The ward sisters are co-operative and interested, although taking no active part in the examinations.

From my point of view as a tutor I am able to assess more exactly the nurse/patient relationship, use of equipment, dressings, etc. and the ability to organize and instruct.

To sum up, examination in the wards has for me every advantage and no disadvantage.

G. M. CLARK,
Sister Tutor.

THE SEPARATE WHITLEY COUNCILS

MADAM.—The recent increase in overtime rates awarded to ancillary grades in hospitals prompts me to make the following comparison in the hope that those members of the Staff Side of the Nurses and Midwives Whitley Council will give most serious consideration during their negotiations for increased salaries for nurses.

A male ward orderly in a mental hospital, needing no experience or qualification, and perhaps not even speaking our language, may earn for a 42-hour week, if on a shift system similar to nurses and including Saturday afternoon and Sunday morning, a weekly wage of £13 9s. 4d.

A staff nurse in a mental hospital, on sixth increment receives a weekly salary of £13 13s. 6d. for 44-hour week. This is after three years training as a student nurse and five years as a staff nurse.

The salaries compare, but the responsibility, experience, qualifications, hours of duty and other factors have no comparison.

It must be necessary to have separate Whitley Councils to cover the various grades employed throughout the hospital service but surely a little cohesion would not be amiss when startling comparisons like this are made. Needless to say there are no vacancies at this hospital for ward orderlies, but many for staff nurses, student nurses and nursing assistants.

SOUTH AFRICAN NURSES FUND

MADAM.—Whatever the intention of Miss Bridges' letter of October 6, and however just her remarks may be, I have a fear that the effect of it will be merely to persuade your readers that our South African Nurses Fund is unnecessary, if not actually misguided. May I therefore make a few brief remarks.

(1) I am sure that if any of your readers care to question any African nurse who has done, or is doing, post-certificate training in this country, and ask her whether she wouldn't have done better to stay in S. Africa for such post-basic courses as are available to her there, she will reply emphatically that the value of the training here outweighs every consideration mentioned by Miss Bridges.

(2) It may well be true that the local conditions for such nursing as midwifery are special to each area; but if the implication is that midwifery training in England does not fit a nurse for midwifery practice in Africa, I take leave to question this. Part of any thorough training is surely training in adaptability.

(3) Unfortunately, though this is clearly not Miss Bridges' meaning, her suggestion that, owing to differing conditions in all countries initial training (in midwifery) is more appropriately 'undertaken in the country of origin' will be read by the African nurse in the context of Dr. Verwoerd's 'Bantu Education', in which he argues for a special kind of education for black people 'to fit the native to his or her environment.' It is this fear of discrimination (from which the South African Nursing Council and Association are happily free) which must at all costs be allayed. In my view one of the finest ways of allaying it is to welcome African nurses for further training in this land.

Miss Bridges rightly says that 'it would be as rewarding for nurses from Great Britain to avail themselves of opportunities in South Africa, as . . . for South African nurses to come to this country': and many a mission hospital would hope that her words might lead some to volunteer. But they must be ready to find that compulsory legal segregation of black from white will seriously hamper human relationships. In this country, in the nursing profession at least, we are mercifully free (I hope) from this plague; and so we should be warm in our welcome to the non-white nurse who comes here partly to escape it for a while.

MARTIN JARRETT-KERR, C.R.
Cardiff.

MADAM.—I have read the letters by Miss Bridges and Miss Simpson in the Nursing Times of September 15 which will no doubt have the effect of making your readers think that the Fund is both unnecessary and completely inadvisable.

May I therefore, as an African who was trained and worked here, after qualifying in South Africa, plead for the value of this Fund.

Miss Bridges implies that, in such subjects as ophthalmology and midwifery, it is better for a nurse to train in her country of origin. Nevertheless to my knowledge the South African Nursing Association has never discouraged nurses, black or white, from coming to the United Kingdom for further training in just such subjects. This seems to contradict Miss Bridges' argument.

Surely the reason why the South African Nursing Association does not discourage—sometimes actively encourages—nurses is not that the training in South Africa is inferior or anything of the kind but that (a) the training schools in the United Kingdom have an international reputation; (b) travel and comparison of conditions of nursing in different countries is itself a widening experience; (c) any special conditions of a particular country are a challenge to adaptation and the better the course the more flexible and adaptable the student should be as a result of it.

Further, there are unsavoury conditions in South Africa which make it valuable for nurses from there to do some training out of South Africa. These conditions do not apply to other countries. The arguments in favour of 'training in South Africa for the particular circumstances of South Africa' are only too reminiscent of Dr. Verwoerd's bankrupt philosophy of 'Bantu education', 'Bantu Universities' etc. 'to fit the Bantu for their environment'.

SNA BADGES

MADAM.—In a gimmick-crazy generation the Student Nurses' Association should consider the advisability of members wearing its badge while on duty in a hospital. Recently a houseman, familiar with the badges of trained hospital staff, but unacquainted with the SNA emblem, gave instructions to an irresponsible junior nurse which all but ended in disaster. As she was wearing a badge, he said, he thought she was a staff nurse.

Surely the only symbol permissible on any nurse's indoor uniform is that earned by experience and examination.

PRIVATE NURSES

MADAM.—Mrs. Howard (September 29) wrote of non-nurses supplied as assistant nurses by 'a certain nursing co-operation'—she had two points which, in the interests of all trained nurses, she felt should be made public: (1) that young, inexperienced girls were sent out as assistant nurses at up to 8 guineas per week; (2) that one such person aimed to get her agency to take on foreign students for this purpose.

In England, nursing co-operations (that is, employment agencies) operate by permission and under inspection from local county councils, by annual licence of which there are two types: (i) an employment agency licence, allowing supply of all persons with the exception of theatricals and nurses; (ii) a nursing agency licence for the supply of nurses (including midwives) only, nurse being a legal title for a Registered or Enrolled person.

A nursing co-operation, bureau, association or agency breaks no law in supplying 'all grades' of staff for nursing duties, providing that the licensee holds both these licences, and providing that they do not state that the person is a nurse.

The Royal College of Nursing recommended salary for resident SRNs is 10½ guineas (no deductions for board, lodging or laundry) for a six-day/night week. This seems reasonable remuneration for the long hours still worked by nurses outside the health service; and the National Association of State Enrolled Nurses have their salaries under review at present. There can be no union-fixed wage for these unqualified people who keep nurses out of many interesting extra-hospital posts, for example, the factory first-aider, school matrons, sanatorium sisters, nannies—and what about nursing appointments officers?

Mrs. Howard is, I see, SRN, SCM and may not herself realize that matrons of other nursing homes are not always qualified nurses themselves and provided they have one SRN on the premises prefer to run their establishments with less expensive auxiliary labour.

Regarding her second point, I take it that Mrs. Howard is not referring to foreign 'au pair' girls already filling fringe-nursing vacancies in their hundreds.

The present Aliens Acts forbid non-British students from taking 'casual' or 'emergency' employment for which nursing co-operations cater—so it is unlikely that what she fears will actually come about—unless our entry into the Common Market and the expected European Free Trade alters existing regulations.

PEACE FOR THE PATIENT

MADAM.—May I clarify a few points with regard to Winifred Eardley-Field's letter (September 29). I am sorry that she thinks I am being cantankerous, as my whole aim was to point out how we can improve our basic nursing care.

While in hospital as a patient, I had a privileged view of nursing from the other side of the fence. I realized that nurses, myself included, however kind and considerate they are, do not fully understand how even small noises are magnified many times to an ill person. With just a little thought, we could perhaps try to walk a little less heavily, speak a little quieter, and remember that a slight knock against the end of the bed feels like a thunderbolt.

Of course, other hospital noises cannot be avoided until new equipment can be bought, and structural alterations can be made, for example, polythene pails, and separate wards for emergency admissions during the night. I am not suggesting that these admissions be kept waiting until morning, but that this problem together with many others, be present in our minds until such times as we can solve them.

No, I do not wish illness on our doctors and nurses, but do you not think that a nurse who has suffered can give more understanding to those who are suffering?

May I conclude by saying how lucky your correspondent is to have been nursed in hospitals where there is no internal noise!

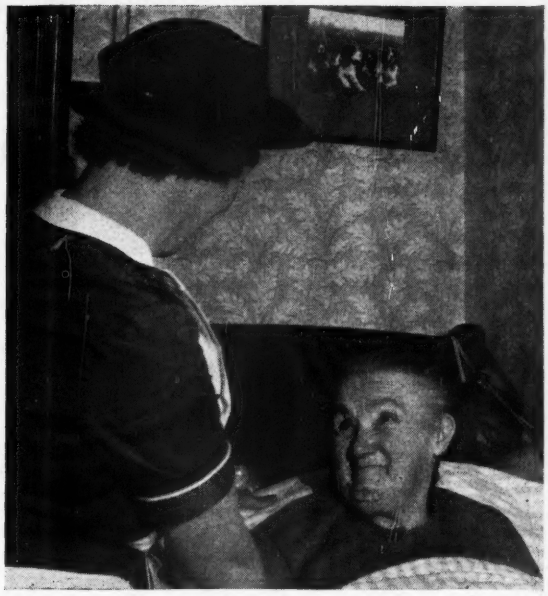
Paediatric Nursing at The Hospital for Sick Children

Two post-certificate courses for SRNs will start at The Hospital for Sick Children, Great Ormond Street, next year. This training is for 13 months, provided the nurse has had at least two months' experience of nursing sick children during her general training and before registration. At the end of this period she will be able to take her RSCN. These two courses will be in February and September each year, but numbers will be limited.

Home and Welfare Services for the Aged



In the 1930's the unemployed posed the biggest social problem for this country; since the war there is little doubt that this unenviable position has been occupied by the elderly. In legislating for the 1950's we did not sufficiently anticipate their needs. The switch in social priorities to increasing provision for the aged has not been as rapid as so many people have tended to assume.

Home Helps

There are now the equivalent of roughly 25,000 home helps serving three to three-and-a-half per cent. of people over 65. But the service varies widely in scope. In areas such as Lancashire, Nottinghamshire, London, Barnsley, Rotherham, Reading and South Shields the proportion is between 6 and 10 per cent. In many others, such as Cornwall, Derbyshire, Sussex, Liverpool and Manchester, it is less than 2 per cent.

Often the home help is restricted to two hours' cleaning a week for each individual, but sometimes many more hours are worked and other duties, such as shopping and cooking, are performed. According to where they live, infirm old people with identical needs living alone may get one or two hours cleaning once a day, once a fortnight or not at all.

District Nurses

The increase in the number of district nurses has fallen off in recent years, and the equivalent of only 60 or 70 full-time nurses has been recruited each year since 1956. District nurses pay about half their visits to old people. The district nursing service has only some 2,500 more nurses than before 1948.

Health Visitors

If we count two part-time workers as one full-time worker, there are now fewer health visitors than there were between 1948 and 1952. The proportion of visits paid to old people has remained at less than 10 per cent. throughout the last decade, despite recent exhortations to give more time to the aged. Although the figures do not disclose the situation exactly, it is probably true to say that a smaller proportion of old people are visited by health visitors than 10 years ago.

Abstract of an address given by Mr. Peter Townsend at the annual general meeting of the Association of Directors of Welfare Services.

Other Services

There is no evidence of much expansion in mobile meals services and only 20,000 old people, or less than half per cent., are catered for. Recent research suggests that these services would have to be expanded at least three- or four-fold if current needs are to be met.

There is also little hard evidence of much expansion in other voluntary services, except for social clubs, and though day and occupation centres, boarding-out and night attendance schemes exist, there are many parts of the country which do not possess these services.

Housing

Many of the aged live in sub-standard housing. There is a need for a large number of houses specially designed to cater for different levels of infirmity and handicap. Estimates of current and future population changes suggest that the number of small dwellings being built by local authorities is less than half the number required to meet emerging needs.

Many residential homes for the aged have been converted and built since the war but the number of old people living in the former workhouses has not declined very much since 1950.

Despite the emphasis of both Labour and Conservative governments on the advantages of care at home or in the community, there is no evidence of a major switch of expenditure from institutional to domiciliary services. Although much is spoken about the need for better co-ordination, a reform of the administrative structure of the home and welfare services and a big expansion of them are more important.

Social Policy

It is difficult to make a general assessment of policy trends since 1948, particularly in relation to services which vary so widely in their objects, their administration, their financing and their scope.

With this qualification we are obliged to conclude that the major social issue of the 1950's, and now the 1960's, was not properly foreseen in the early post-war discussions and legislation; that some of the most important aims affecting the elderly have not been carried into practice; that the development of many services has scarcely kept pace with the rising numbers of old people, still less met their needs; that despite the most strenuous and imaginative efforts on the part of many voluntary and statutory bodies, the pattern of services is extraordinarily fragmented and unco-ordinated, and that despite public advocacy of the principle of maintaining the elderly in their own homes wherever possible, there is no evidence of the switch in priorities which would be necessary if this principle were to be applied in practice.

In short, the challenge has not been posed or met. A future social historian may well select this as the most striking failure of social policy in the last decade.

Two possible reforms are suggested: the development of a comprehensive family help service which would be responsible for the individual's social and household needs, and the further development of group practice, ancillary workers being attached to the practice and the general practitioner being primarily responsible for the individual's health needs at home.

ASSOCIATIONS OF HOSPITAL MATRONS AND OF HEADMISTRESSES

Questions on the Mental Health Service

It was a forward-looking idea which prompted the Association of Hospital Matrons (Western group) to ask members of the Association of Headmistresses in the area to meet them for a day conference at Barrow Hospital, nr. Bristol. The visitors were able to see something during the day of the work of a modern psychiatric hospital—one which is fortunate in that it does not inherit a legacy of grim and massive buildings from the past, but consists of villas, widely spaced in beautiful grounds.

With Miss J. Cordingly in the chair, the audience received a clear, simple but challenging description of the modern mental health service; how recent legislation will affect its pattern and—above all—the place of the nurse, including especially the young entrant to nurse training.

Both those who asked and those who answered surely learned much at question time, and it was interesting that questions from the floor unerringly pin-pointed present shortcomings or difficult problems in the mental health services.

Children and Adolescents

Is there such a thing as mental illness among children, asked one of the headmistresses; and if so, where do they go for treatment? This question brought out the shortage of units for emotionally disturbed or psychotic children, child guidance clinics, etc., of child psychiatrists, and of nursing staff for this arduous work, which needs short duty periods if the staff themselves are to retain mental health.

What happens to emotionally disturbed adolescents? brought a description from the platform of a special unit for such boys and girls. Sexes were mixed for ordinary classroom lessons and for social activities and entertainments.

When to Train

Is it best to do mental nursing training before general training, or vice versa? Although it was considered there could be no hard-and-fast rule, Miss O. Davis, sister tutor at St. George's Hospital, London, felt that mental training was such a help in understanding the normal person in illness that psychiatric training should come first.

How shall we answer parents—and more particularly fathers—who object to their daughters going into nursing at all, more especially psychiatric nursing? Headmistresses were asked to try to persuade the parents to visit the mental hospital to see modern conditions for themselves.

Is not 18 years too young for girls to be among psychiatric patients? (Misgivings on this question were expressed several times in differing ways.) Mr. W. F. Raines, tutor at Barrow Hospital, from the platform said 'No, provided the girls are of the right type, emotionally stable.' He added that the age objection could apply as much or more to general training when the young student nurse might see someone of her own age group die of a distressing illness.

Is all this publicity about psychiatric patients on TV and in the papers a regrettable thing or not? Medical opinion on the platform was that, on balance, it was a good thing; fear of the unknown was a bar to progress, and the more people knew and understood, the more their interest was aroused, the easier it was to secure co-operation from the public.

As a postscript: one among the highly intelligent, well informed, lay people present had been very puzzled on a past (first) visit to a psychiatric hospital at several references to 'open doors'. She was uncertain whether this referred to draughty rooms or the benefits of fresh air for the patients!

Here surely is a warning against the too ready assumption that current technical jargon, however commonplace to those concerned, is necessarily understood by members of the public.

An approved refresher course for midwives arranged at Guisborough by the Newcastle RHB, attracted 193 midwives—but of these 135 were non-practising. Such was the response that the venue for the five-day course had to be changed, because the nurses home chosen was not large enough. It was hoped to attract more qualified midwives back into practice. Miss G. M. Winterhalder, nursing officer to the Board, organized the course.

What is a Vitamin deficiency disease?

The traditional answer is straightforward: a disease caused by lack of a specific vitamin in the diet. The list is short and definite: Rickets, Scurvy, Beri-beri, Pellagra and Xerophthalmia. Those who like cumbersome terms may care to add: Ariboflavinosis. Even the word anicotinamidosis has been seen in print.

All these are based on the assumption that there is a sort of "All or none" law underlying vitamin needs. An individual either has enough in his food and is healthy or he has too little and has a deficiency disease.

But this concept is altogether too simple to meet the facts.

What about the inebriate in whom the tissue enzymes are so fully engaged in metabolising the alcohol that glucose catabolism (which depends on the B vitamins) is interfered with and the patient goes into coma?

What about the post-gastrectomy patient whose malabsorption imposes a tissue deficiency of vitamins and who becomes confused as a result?

Are these to be regarded as deficiency diseases?

In fact what IS a deficiency disease?

One thing is certain: nobody knows and understands more about vitamins than the research team at Vitamins Limited. Over a long period of years the Company has specialised in the research into and development of vitamins and now produces an unrivalled range of vitamin products, including:

FOR NUTRITIONAL SUPPLEMENTATION
Bemax, Vitavel Syrup, Juvel Elixir, Pregnavite.

Here and There

HVs Meet the Red Cross

A number of health visitors attending a refresher course at the Royal College of Nursing went to a very pleasant sherry party given by the British Red Cross Society at its headquarters in Grosvenor Crescent, London, on October 11.

The purpose of the party was to show the health visitors an exhibition of the Society's work and, in particular, of aids for the disabled which are available through the Society. Health visitors often have need to call on the resources of voluntary societies such as the BRCS, and these health visitors were grateful both for the charming hospitality of Dame Anne Bryans, deputy chairman of the executive committee, BRCS, and her colleagues, and for the opportunity of being reminded of the immense scope of the BRCS's services.

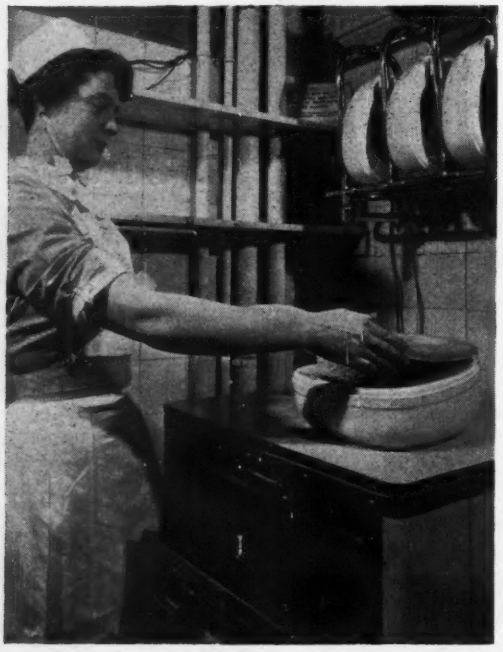
'Nurse'

The pharmaceutical firm of William R. Warner have just issued the first number of a new publication, Nurse, which will be distributed free to nurses throughout the country each month.

Designed to present interesting articles on a wide variety of subjects written by people in different spheres, this four-page publication does not try to compete in any way with the serious nursing journals.

One interesting feature of the paper is the 'Nurses' Exchange Post' in which advertisements can be placed free for buying, selling and exchanging goods, personal messages and accommodation. The Nursing Times is happy to offer its best wishes for the success of its young contemporary.

Disposable bedpans and urinals, made of papier-mâché, are in use in several hospitals in the North of England. Disposal requires the installation of a special machine, the Clinimatic Disposal Machine. This grinds the disposables and their contents into a fine pulp which can be discharged into the drains.



'Back to Nursing' Day

An excellent response resulted from the announcement (in the local press) that the German Hospital, London, E.8, was holding a one-day refresher course for former nurses—whether State-registered, State-enrolled or nursing auxiliaries—with the avowed object of attracting them back to nursing. Matron and the group secretary personally welcomed all who attended. Talks and a tour of the hospital were arranged as well as demonstrations of practical procedures. Particular interest was aroused by items of disposable equipment now in use.

Polythene Linings for Bedpans

Disposable polythene linings for bedpans are now being offered by Beep Ltd., of Albury, Surrey. The lining, already threaded with two draw-strings, is secured inside the rim of the bedpan, protecting it from direct contamination. For disposal, the two strings are pulled tight and the bag may be carried to the lavatory. A single cut with a sharp pair of scissors allows the contents and the bottom of the bag to flow away; the strings and neck are burned.

These linings (10 for 4s.) are unlikely to be required in hospitals where bedpan washer-sterilizers are installed. There may be a place for them in district work, although the scissors—as more likely than a toilet brush to be used for other purposes—may be an infection hazard.

Also available from the same firm are disposable polythene urinals, and plastic-foam filled pads for greater comfort on the bedpan.

Central Sterile Club

Superintendents of central supply departments in Northern Ireland have formed a club, and would be interested to be notified of any new equipment, etc., in connection with this work.

The hon. secretary is Miss M. Haslett, Ulster Hospital for Children and Women, Whitehall Parade, Ormeau Road, Belfast 7.

'I told Fred I couldn't give up my career for marriage.'

Fit for the Road

'Fit for the Road' is the theme of excellent publicity material produced by the Royal Society for the Prevention of Accidents, specially relevant for the safety campaign from October to December. Posters, leaflets, booklets and useful 'talking points' are available, suitable for display in clinics, waiting rooms, schools, etc.

The address of RoSPA is Terminal House, 52, Grosvenor Gardens, London, S.W.1 (Tel. SLOane 2246).

Queen Mary's Hospital for the East End

Queen Mary's Hospital for the East End, London, celebrated its centenary on October 17 with a service of thanksgiving conducted by the hospital chaplain, the Rev. Charles Fox; the Bishop of Chelmsford gave the address. After 100 years of work, the hospital (originally the West Ham, Stratford and South Essex Dispensary) looks forward to major developments. Plans are well advanced to turn it into a major unit of 280 beds; it is hoped that this will only be a first phase and that even more extensive development will be sanctioned in the future.

BRANCHES STANDING COMMITTEE

Here are the subjects of resolutions to be discussed at the Branches Standing Committee meeting in London on November 18.

1. That staff 'on call' should receive additional payment.
2. That all major changes of policy and contemplated decisions of far-reaching importance to nursing should be referred to Branches.
3. That equal rank be granted to men and women registered nurses in the forces.
4. That prescription charges for old age pensioners be waived.
5. That Branch hon. officers be elected biennially.

There will be several additional items to the agenda already circulated.

- A report will be given on the findings of the questionnaire relating to the reorganization of the BSC.
- A report will be given on proposals for a unified professional body.
- A report will be given about certain points relating to Section organization.
- Lady Davidson will speak on the work of the Business and Professional Women's Association.

All these matters will be discussed in YOUR Branch. Go to your Branch meeting and brief YOUR delegate to speak for you at the BSC meeting.

Aberdeen Study Day

The Public Health Section within the Aberdeen Branch recently held a study day with a psychiatric slant. Lectures on 'Dynamic Psychiatry in Present-day Medicine', and 'The Mental Problems of the Aged, their Care and Rehabilitation', were given, and Dr. Joshua Carse, medical superintendent of Graylingwell Hospital, Chichester, gave an account of the Worthing experiment—the 'district mental health service'.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS

During the first weeks of November large numbers of annual subscriptions are being received at the College. Membership cards and certificates of insurance are issued to members as soon as possible after the subscriptions have been received.

In addition, the College receives notification of all subscriptions paid through a bank, approximately 9,000 of them. Members who pay their subscriptions by banker's order will therefore appreciate that it is impossible to deal with all these subscriptions at once. Every effort is made to hasten the sending out of membership cards and insurance certificates, and members can help by not making inquiries during the next few weeks.

APPOINTMENT

The Middlesex Hospital, W.1

Miss Kathleen M. Biggin, D.N. (Lond.), S.T. Cert., B.A. Hons. (Leeds), has been appointed principal tutor. Miss Biggin is at present education officer, Birmingham Centre of Nursing Education, Royal College of Nursing, to which she was appointed in September 1960. She did her general training at The Middlesex Hospital and during three of the war years she was ward sister and night superintendent at the hospital's E.M.S. Base at Stoke Mandeville. She has held sister tutor's posts at The Middlesex and The Hospital for Sick Children, Great Ormond Street, and was principal tutor at the latter from 1945-54. Before going to Birmingham, Miss Biggin was for a year tutor in the Education Department at the Royal College of Nursing, London.

WINTER REUNION AND FINAL SPEECHMAKING CONTEST

The Winter Reunion of the SNA will be held on Wednesday, November 22, in London. Application forms have been sent to each Unit and must be returned by Tuesday, November 7.

In Parliament

Maintenance Services Mr. Kenneth Robinson asked the Minister of Health on October 23 what advice he proposed to give to hospital authorities with regard to the placing of certain hospital services, such as catering and the cleaning of wards, in the hands of outside contractors; and what his policy was on this matter.

Mr. Powell.—Experiments are being made in the use of outside contractors. Pending the outcome no general policy has been recommended to hospital authorities.

Mr. Kenneth Robinson.—Would not the Minister agree that in principle it is desirable that these services should be kept within the control of the hospital authorities themselves and that they are not driven to these expedients only because they are unable to pay competitive wages and salaries to these grades of staff?

Mr. Powell.—Each service must be looked at on its merits. The guiding consideration must be economy and efficiency in the broadest sense but I am not prejudiced in either direction, and I shall certainly look at the outcome of these experiments carefully.

Whitley Councils Mr. Richard Marsh (Greenwich) asked the Minister of Health on October 23 what new instructions he had given to his representatives on the Health Service Whitley Councils in the light of Government policy on wages and salaries in the public service; and what limitations he had imposed on the right of arbitration in cases of disagreement between the two sides.

Mr. Powell.—I have informed both sides of the Whitley Councils that the same principles will be applied to the functioning of the health service machinery for determining pay as are being applied in the Civil Service.

Mr. Marsh.—Since the Minister already has the right to reject any agreement within the Whitley Councils with which he disagrees, why does he refuse to permit the councils, Management and Staff Sides, to negotiate operative dates to agreements?

Mr. Powell.—It seems to me right that the same principles should be applied in all parts of the Government service.

Mr. Kenneth Robinson (St. Pancras, North).—The Minister's unilateral action has gone further to destroy the confidence of the NHS staffs in their negotiating machinery. It has had a serious effect on morale within the service and on recruitment, particularly to those grades where there are serious staff shortages.

Mr. Powell.—I am not aware of that. I shall be seeing representatives of the Whitley Council later this week and I shall listen carefully to what they have to say.

OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS

RCN Council: October Meeting

Birmingham Centre of Nursing Education

A report was received from the group appointed by the Council to consider the future position of the Birmingham Centre of Nursing Education. Council agreed to the proposals submitted by the group which included the following: that the College needed an established education centre outside London; that as there was an established centre in Birmingham, this should be kept open; that the centre in Birmingham should in future be a direct extension of the Education Division of the College.

Committee on Education in Obstetrics

Following an invitation from the British Medical Association the Council appointed representatives to meet the Association's Committee on Education in Obstetrics to discuss problems in connection with the inclusion of obstetrics in the syllabus for nurse training.

Committee on Nurse Education

Council learnt with interest the names of those who had accepted invitations to serve on the Committee on Nurse Education. It was intended that the first meeting of the committee should take place in the near future. (Membership list below.)

Section Organization

In the light of the increasing specialization within the College, and the constantly increasing number of meetings involved, Council agreed that the time had come when the Section organization within the College should be reviewed. This matter is to be referred to the Sections for their consideration, and the Branches will also be invited to consider the effect on them of any reorganization.

Nurse Administrators Section

(i) Nursing Staff Records. The Section reported that it had been asked by the Ward and Departmental Sisters Section to consider present arrangements for the keeping of nurses' records. Concern had been expressed that in many instances ward sisters and others applying for senior posts had been unable to obtain references of previous posts as hospitals had no records of their work as sisters. After considerable discussion Council agreed that the Association of Hospital Matrons should be asked to consider the matter and that later a joint meeting should be held.

(ii) The Enrolled Nurse. Council received a memorandum on the enrolled nurse prepared by the Nurse Administrators Section and agreed that, subject to a certain amount of re-editing, the memorandum should be circulated to Government departments, regional hospital boards, hospital management committees with enrolled nurse training schools, and area nurse training committees.

Sister Tutor Section

A letter had been received from the Sister Tutor Section expressing concern in connection with the proficiency allowances which had been recommended for student nurses in the salary claim submitted to the Staff Side of the Nurses and Midwives Whitley Council. It was pointed out to the Section that the salary proposals had been drawn up by a special group, representative of the Sections and including the Sister Tutor Section, and subsequently approved by the Labour Relations Committee and Council of the College before submission to the Staff Side. While appreciating some of the points made by the Tutor Section, the Council felt that any views on the inclusion of proficiency allowances should have been put forward at an earlier stage.

Northern Ireland Hospitals Authority

The Committee for Northern Ireland reported that Miss M. F. J. Baird had been appointed to serve as a member of the Authority as from October 1, 1961, until September 30, 1964.

BRISTOL

The thriving port of Bristol has been a county since 1373 and is a City and County in its own right. This year marks the centenary of the Act of Parliament by which the Clifton and Durdham Downs—those beautiful open spaces—were preserved for ever for the use of the citizens of Bristol. It is hard to realise that, centuries ago, while the Saxon town of Bristol grew into a commercial centre and port, with ships coming right into the heart of the city, the Downs remained remote and often dangerous, and that such well-known districts as Clifton, Westbury-on-Trym and Stoke Bishop, now completely suburban, were small villages set in ancient parishes of the same names. It is also greatly interesting to learn that, near St. Mary Redcliffe Church, so greatly praised by Queen Elizabeth the First, are the Redcliffe Caves, dating back to the early eighteenth century. Bristol certainly combines the mediaeval and the modern.

The many hospitals in and around the city offer excellent opportunities for nurse training of every kind, and advancement after qualification.

COSSHAM MEMORIAL HOSPITAL, KINGSWOOD, BRISTOL (86 beds)

Cossham Memorial Hospital is built on a hill in the residential and industrial district of Kingswood in East Bristol. In-patient beds (86) provide for general medicine and surgery, orthopaedics and dermatology. There is a busy Casualty Department. The Nurses' Social Club is very active and indoor and outdoor recreations are cultivated.
